Brazil Reinstates Direct Elections For Its President

BRASILIA — Congress voted unanimously Thursday to amend Brazil's constitution to reinstate direct presidential elections, meeting n popular demand frustrated by 21 wars of military rule.

The Congress passed several other major political bills. These will allow illiterate people to vote, legalize the Communist Party, establish direct elections for mayors of state capitals, grant greater freedom to form and operate political parties and end a system that allowed a congressman to be dismissed for voting against a party proposal.

Representative João Gilberto, who sponsored the bill allowing direct presidential elections, called the vote "an enormous advance for democracy." He said, "There was yesterday and there's today and today is totally different. Today we have an absolutely free political TOKYO — Rival politicians in the governing Liberal Democratic Party have seized upon the trade crisis between the United States and Japan as an issue on which they hope to challenge Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone.

But none has made noticeable, headway so far, and some political commentators say they suspect that Mr. Nakasone has grown stronger as the result of open dis-

The big question has been what, if anything the government should do to stimulate domestic demand and thus improve the chances that Japanese will heed their prime minever's call to buy more foreign Poroducts. Addressing the parade, Defense Minister Sergei L. Sokolov spoke of the "invincibility of the land of the Soviets" and said that "retribution will be inevitable" for anyone who encroaches on the security of the Soviet Union or its partners.

In addition to these conspicuous embarrassments Mr. Reagan's effectiveness has also been hampered by a series of minor mishaps that conflicted with the White House's reputation for smoothly choreographing events.

Career Plans Backfire for Diplomats in U.S. Service

By Maureen Santini The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - About 100 Foreign Service officers may find their diplomatic careers abruptly halted as they are forced into early retirement because there are not enough promotions to go around.

"These are good solid perform-ers and it's coming as something of a shock to them," said Demis K. Hays, president of the American Foreign Service Association, the union of career diplomats. "These are not the duds."

The problem is the Foreign Service's new retirement system that was designed to make way for taleated employees on their way up by reducing the number of senior offi-cers in a system that had been criticized as top-heavy.

But no one knew it would work out quite this way. Under the plan, if a career diplomat does not win a promotion intothe senior ranks within six years, he or she is retired mandatorily. It is the diplomat who decides when to begin the six-year clock, once he or she has reached the top of the mid-

About 150 officers, some in their mid-40s, began the process in 1981, the first year the new system was in effect. Their decisions were based on educated assumptions about what the promotion rate would be in the coming six years. Their terms will be up from the beginning of

Mr. Hays said: "Most of them said, 'Tm a bright gny. I've got a good record. I might as well take a chance and get promoted really last because there's no way they're going to let me go because I'm too valuable."

"The trouble is, there are 150 other guys who have said exactly the same thing, and not all of them are going to be promoted. They literally just cannot get across the threshold because promotion rates have been appreciably lower than they were at the time these people made this decision," he said.

The rates have been 30 percent to 40 percent lower for several reasons: the large number of political appointees who are given diplomatic posts; less voluntary attrition than anticipated; and an increase from 60 to 65 in the mandatory

For most of the officers vulnerable to mandatory retirement the next year will be the last for winning promotion. Those who began the process after 1981 "saw what was going on and they were timing themselves a little better," Mr.

William I. Bacchus, of the State Department's personnel bureau, said: "Basically, the system is based on vacancies. There's got to be a vacancy at the next level before you can promote somebody, however good they are."

Unlike the Civil Service where employees may remain at one grade level permanently, the Foreign Service requires people to resign if they have not been promoted in a certain number of years.

Los Angeles Agrees to Raise Pay of 3,900 Women

By Janer Clayton

Los Angeles Times Service
LOS ANGELES — In a major concession to the idea of "comparable worth," the city of Los Angeles has agreed to bring the wages of 3,900 women holding traditionally low-paying jobs into line with those of men in jobs on the same skill has used comparable worth as a basis for setting wages," said Cheryl Parisi, a spokeswoman for the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees. which negotiated Wednesday's set-tlement with the city.

She said that other crites, such as New York, have agreed to increase the salaries of librarians and those in other job categories traditionally dominated by women. But "this is the first time we've talked about comparability, saying, 'See what truck drivers make and pay cleri-cals the same," she added.

The agreement, if approved by the City Council, will cost the city. $12 million in special salary in-creases, averaging 5 percent a year through June 1988.

The increases, retroactive to April 1, would bring the wages of secretaries, clerks and librarians, at least 70 percent of whom are women, close to wages paid for jobs of similar skill levels dominated by men, such as gardeners, garage at-tendants, drivers and maintenance

In arriving at the settlement, said the city, administrative officer,

Keith Comic, the city compared entry-level jobs and found that ones occupied by women and those occupied by men were separated by a 15-percent wage gap.

An additional group of a few hundred employees, including executive secretaries and principal clerks, are likely to receive similar types of "pay equity" raises in the next few months, he said.

Study Finds Fish In Diet Lessens Heart Disease Les Angeles Times Service

LOS ANGELES — Dutch researchers have found that eating at least a pound of fish each week appears to reduce the risk of dying from heart disease.

The 20-year study, published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, provides the strongest evidence to date that fish contain some substance that appears to reduce the risk of heart attacks.

The Dutch scientists, from the Institute of Social Medicine at the University of Leiden, began their study in 1960 with 872 men aged 40 to 59.

After excluding subjects with known heart disease and con-ducting detailed analyses of each man's weekly diet, the re-searchers followed their subjects for 20 years. By the study's end in 1980, 78 men had died from heart disease.

All the subjects had been di-vided into categories based on the amount of fish consumed. The average was about five ounces (142 grams) a week, but some consumed none and others are more than a pound (453 grams) a week.

Reagan's Stance on Missiles Contradicts Past U.S. Position

By George C. Wilson

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan has contradicted a long-standing contention of the U.S. government by contending that a new mobile Soviet missile increases the danger that Moscow plans to strike first in a future war.

From President Kennedy, inaugurated in 1961, until Mr. Reagan's seech Wednesday in Strasbourg, France, the White House has contended that missiles that could survive a first strike and be fired only in retaliation stabilized the balance of terror.

The missiles to worry about most, it has been argued through the years, are those that stand still above ground, where they would have to be fired at the first sign of attack or be lost — "use them or lose them," in the jargon of nuclear strategists. They feared that the United States or the Soviet Union might fire nuclear missiles in response to a false alarm.

Low Morale Cited in U.K. Socret Service

LONDON - Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher presented to Parliament on Thursday an account of drunkenness and low mos rale in Britain's security services.

Releasing an official report into events leading up to the imprisonment last year on spying charges of Michael Bettaney, who had been an officer in the MI5 counterintelligence service, Mrs. Thatcher cited several serious criticisms the report made of the management of the security services.

Mr. Bettaney was arrested after attempting to pass a secret assess ment of Soviet intelligence activity in Britain to the Soviet Embassy in London and to gain recruitment as an agent for the KGB security ser-vice. He was imprisoned in April last year for 23 years. Mrs. Thatcher said a four member security commission had concluded in its report that "there should have been, but was not, a very full investigation of Bettaney's lifestyle, which would probably have led to the removal" of his security clearance.

security clearance. The commission's 34 page report portrayed Mr. Bettaney as a mistig who drank heavily and who had problems in his relationships with women. It said he adopted a Mara-ist ideology during his time as a counterintelligence officer, while remaining a devout Catholic.

Mr. Bettaney acknowledged he was drinking the equivalent of a bottle of liquor a day, the report said. It added that he was frequently seen drunk in public and oversheard saying such things as: "I'm working for the wrong side. I'm sure the East Germans would look sure the East Germans would look after me better.". The report said that heavy drinking was widespread in the scentity-forces and that its risks had been underrated. Staff members were recommended to report excessive drinking by colleagues.

It also acknowledged low morale, among agents by noting that the commissioners had received highly critical reports of the internal organization.

recommendations for tightening ecurity clearance procedures were being put into effect.

U.S. Drops Curbs on Food Aid to Ethiopia

By Blaine Harden Washington Past Service ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia The United States has dropped restrictions on food aid to Ethiopia that relief officials here have said were damaging efforts to help this country recover from famine. The lifting of restrictions on de-velopment aid to Ethiopia means that relief agencies in Ethiopia now will be able to use U.S. food and

The restrictions had prevented the use of food sent by the United States in food-for-work plans. Under such plans, peasants were given food in return for work that helped them rehabilitate their farmland that had been seared by drought.

The restrictions had been criticized by relief officials in Ethiopia, a Marxist country whose relations with the United States are largely unfriendly. U.S. aid amounts to $222 million, about one-third of the international famine relief effort in Ethiopia.

LAGOS - Aliens expelled by Nigeria left by plane, ship and truck convoy, but unofficial counts indicated that only a fraction of the 700,000 would make it by the Friday deadline.

The military government's inte-rior minister, Major General Mohammed Magoro, said Thursday that the government did not intend to extend the deadline, but also indicated no force would be used against those who did not get out by Friday. Nigerian authorities ordered the exodus last month.

"They have no cause to fear," he said of the aliens, who are accused of taking the jobs of Nigerians now that the oil boom is over and of-causing high crime rates in cities.

Millions of West Africans, mostly Ghanaians, fled from famine and political upheaval to Nigeria in the 1970s during an oil boom.

Aliens waiting without shelter at the border have been drenched by heavy rains that began Tuesday night. As many as 100 vehicles at a time crossed into Benin on Wednesday, most them headed for Togo and then to Ghana,

Anti-Sandinist Sanctions

¹Nicaraguan revolution, and the Sandinists moved left toward tighter internal control, sponsorship of a guerrilla "final offensive" in El Salvador, closer links with fellow Marxists in Havana and Moscow and greater tension no, with Washington. Ronald Reagan ceased ac-. m. commodating and applied pressure - and the Sandinists moved farther left. The record does not justify confidence that anything the Unit-red States does will soften the Sandinists' determination to consolidate power. Yet serious 1. people in the hemisphere continue to try.

We say this by way of addressing the eco---- nomic sanctions that President Reagan an-: nounced on May 1. There was broad agree---: ment -- from liberals more in anger, and conservatives more in sorrow - that ending -direct trade and cutting air and sea links is too little, too late. Quickly the conventional wisdom became that if these measures make any mark, they will add to the people's misery, hurt good guys in the private sector and drive the Sandinists into the Kremlin's arms.

Had Daniel Ortega Saavedra not provoked and embarrassed the U.S. Congress by visiting Moscow right after Congress said no to the "contras," the reaction doubtless would have been even sharper. All this despite the fact that some of those who bad-mouthed sanctions had opposed military intervention a week earlier on grounds that lesser remedies, such as trade restrictions, should be tested first.

In fact, what the objections amount to is what all of us should know by now. The Sandinists are a resourceful crew. In the prevailing circumstances, it is not easy for Americans or anyone else to get at them. A soft policy has been tried, and a hard policy, and assorted blends, and nothing worked.

Still there remains reason for applying pressures that, while of uncertain effect, at least express the distrust and wariness that Americans of different persuasions feel toward the Sandinists. It is not ignoble or intrusive or bullying for the United States to take a neighbor's interest in wanting to see countries in the __Western Hemisphere move toward democracy

Jimmy Carter tried to accommodate the and respect for neighbors. It is legitimate, vicaraguan revolution, and the Sandinists necessary and right. The Sandinists in coming to power sought and received the hemisphere's support by promising democracy and respect for neighbors. This is the case for sanctions.

That said, we must add that President Reagan has gone about imposing them in a slapdash way. They could have been introduced as part of a careful strategy worked out with Congress and with the Contadora democracies and the Europeans. One version of such a strategy has been suggested by Senators Nunn, Johnston, Bentsen and Boren. Instead, Washington is acting alone, without commitments from either Latins or Europeans and, worse, without a clear and agreed statement of what the sanctions are meant to achieve.

United States policy should be trying to induce the Sandinists to trim-the activities and connections that trouble Nicaragua's neighbors and to move toward a political opening. But if, as seems evident, the Reagan administration is still striving to remove the Sandinists, then the new sanctions are going to be widely taken not as a turn toward a more sensible and sustainable Nicaragua policy but as a feint in a presidential battle with Congress over relaunching the "contras."

Then there is South Africa. Intellectually it is not hard to grasp the proposition that sanctions make sense in some circumstances and not in others. Yes, we would say, in Nicaragua, where such a lever, properly applied, could help mobilize the pressures supported by many anxious people in the hemisphere. No in South Africa, where sanctions might undercut internal forces pressing strongly for change.

As a practical matter, however, Mr. Reagan may already have forfeited the chance to have either case considered on its merits. On the Nicaraguan sanctions he acted alone and in haste when at least a brief pause and some consultation were plainly in order. On South African sanctions, which he opposes, the political tide was probably already going against him and has been given new impetus now. In both places, his policy is in trouble.

-THE WASHINGTON POST.

Put Central America Back in Perspective

L OS ANGELES — I once heard a former U.S. ambassador to Brazil sum up how President Reagan's obsession with Nicaragua has distorted the U.S. perception of Latin America: "You could take Central America - all seven countries, their total populations and their combined economies - drop them into the northeast of Brazil and not even make a difference."

He was exaggerating. While Central America covers less than one-fifth of the area covered by the nine states of Brazil's northeast, its population of 20 million is almost half the number of people who live there. All the same, the former ambassador's point - that Brazil is as significant to the United States as Central America, and deserves just as much attention — is valid.

That never hit me more clearly than when I returned to my office last week after a trip through Brazil, Argentina and Peru, and found a stack of mail about Nicaragua waiting for me. The material had built up before the House of Representatives' vote rejecting Mr. Reagan's budget request for $14 million to help anti-Sandinist rebels continue their war to overthrow the Nicaraguan government, and before Mr. Reagan's imposition of trade sanctions against that country. It is an important issue, but I find it ironic that the United States is spending so much time debating the future of a small nation of 3 million people while countries much bigger and in the long run far more important are struggling to sustain fragile democratic governments.

Last month Peru held one of the most significant presidential elections in its long history. The voting was remarkably peaceful, considering the economic troubles and political terrorism of the last two years. The election was a tribute to the faith that most Peruvians still have in democracy. The electors elevated a new and potentially interesting individual to the international scene:

Alan García, 35, a congressman who was the andidate of the leftist and fiercely nationalistic APRA party. When Mr. Garcia is inaugurated in July, Mr. Reagan will have to deal with another aggressive young Latin leader who is not all that different from some Sandinists. Yet Mr. Reagan must hope that Mr. Garcia's government succeeds, because if it does not a guerrilla war that is being waged deep in the Andes by a mysterious and violent Maoist group, Sendero Luminoso, could spread and give Penu troubles that would make El Salvador's bloodshed look mild by comparison.

Argentina's new civilian president, Raul Alfonsin, faces a similar do-or-die challenge. He took over from a discredited military governBy Frank Del Olmo ment just over a year ago and is still struggling with the economic shambles it left behind. By putting nine members of the juntas that preceded him on trial for human rights violations, he has the military on the defensive, but his real problem is with Argentina's middle classes. The Argentines have been spoiled by their country's abundance, and have even grown accus-tomed to inflation-fed prosperity since the war-time boom of the 1940s. Many political analysts fear that they are unwilling to accept the austerity that Mr. Alfonsin must impose if the country is to pay its $35-billion foreign debt. If he pushes too hard. Argentines could turn away from him, tempting the military to oust him.

Brazil faces an even bigger foreign debt (more than $100 billion), and must replace a beloved political leader, Tancredo Neves, who died before he could take office after 20 years of military rule. For now, the nation's leaders have rallied around Mr. Neves's vice president, José Sarney, who has pledged to retain the late leader's ap-pointees and carry out his campaign promises. But even the most optimistic Brazilians expect that consensus to break down once the official period of mourning is over.

Then political sparring will begin to see how long Mr. Sarney remains in office. Will he stay for four years, while Congress rewrites the military regime's old constitution? Or will the many political factions that want direct presidential elections by 1986 have their way? The danger is that Brazil's military does not want a direct vote. It fears that a popularly elected leader might have the clout to punish the military as Mr.

Alfonsin is punishing his generals and admirals.

An important period has begun in which all these countries will require close attention. Can these result described these results and these results are the second to the second their weak democratic governments remain via-ble? Can they pay off burdensome foreign debts and keep their middle and working classes con-tent? Can they keep their military men under civilian control? Most important of all, can they develop economically so that the living standards of their many poor people can improve? Those questions may not be as immediate as the fate of the "contras" in Nicaragua, but they are every bit as important to the Western Hemi-sphere's future stability — even if Mr. Reagan has not realized it yet.

About the Meltdown Risk

What are the chances of a meltdown at one of America's 100-odd nuclear reactors in the next 20 years? Nearly 50-50, or 45 percent, is the surprising figure that the Nuclear Regula-tory Commission recently gave Congress. How can the commission also declare that it finds the risk acceptable? And are the odds of catastrophe really so bad? The short answer is that the commission's estimate is a conservatively biased shot in the dark. Meltdowns are probably less likely than the raw numbers suggest, but there is still no room for nuclear utilities to relax. For an individual reactor, in the commission's latest estimate, the odds of severe core damage are 3 in 10,000 per year. For 100 reactors over 20 years, that accumulates to a 45-percent risk of a meltdown. A severe core melt would sorely endanger the health of the reactor's owner, which could see a $2-billion asset abruptly converted into a $2-billion liability. However, to harm the public, radiation must escape from the site. That is less likely because even after a core melt most of the radioactivity is likely to be contained. The risk-assessment technique depends on identifying chains of accidents that could lead to a core melt. But the uncertainties accomulate down the chain. That means that the technique is a quite useful guide to the probameaningless for the bottom-line disaster of a . er way would be for the commission to focus core melt. Also, as the commission notes, risk on the few riskiest plants that drag up the assessments are biased toward the pessimistic, industry average. The public may already be Many more early signs of accident would have ... safe enough, but nuclear power is too valuable been reported if the odds of meltdown were to let its suppliers live dangerously. worse than the assessments suggest.

Up to a point, the commission's professed satisfaction with the status quo is understandable. The perceived risks of a meltdown have edged slightly higher in the last decade, but the perceived risks of containment failure and radiation escape are now being sharply re-duced. Far less radioactivity escaped from the damaged Three Mile Island reactor than was predicted for such an accident, largely because the radioactive material turned liquid or solid instead of leaking as a gas. But even if meltdown should turn out to be a smaller public threat than assumed, the risk to the industry seems uncomfortably high. A second accident like Three Mile Island's could do terminal damage to the industry's public standing.

The nuclear industry takes the predictions of disaster calmly because it regards risk as-sessment as a useful but self-invalidating tool. By acting to forestall the most likely accident ains, the utilities can reduce the predicted risk. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, too, would like to reduce the chances of a meltdown. It says 3 chances in 10,000 per year is acceptably low, but it is considering a safety goal that aims for a risk of 1 in 10,000.

One way to attain that goal would be for all plants to conduct their own risk assessments to identify the most likely paths to a meltdown. At present only plants under construction are n. but close to — required to undertake such an ar

Reagan's Ideas: Arms Control?

Four-fifths of Mr. Reagan's address to the European Parliament was avowedly ceremonial, and even in total it did not deserve the walkout and the strong silence on the benches of the left. The purpose of his reception was to screeall the defeat of fascism. In that and in the postwar reconstruction and defense of Western Europe, the help of the United States was , and has been crucial. When Mr. Reagan turned to the incipient conflict of today, however, a conspicuous hole appeared in his elo-- quence. He has lost interest, if he ever had an interest, in arms control as commonly under--stood, and seeks only a live-and-let-live arrangement with the Soviet Union until such time as technology, as applied to "star wars," provides a new fix for the world's safety. The four ideas he put to the Russians have either been publicly aired before or offered through diplomatic channels. They are designed to approach a system of crisis management. Mr. Reagan has cast around for some means of breaking the deadlock or ending the spiral.

That the chosen method is liable to make relations more difficult, not less, and to eat away resources and ingeneity which could be better applied, is everyone's profound misfortune. The old man believes he is doing something for peace, and that's the tragedy. - The Guardian (London).

_1910: George V Is Proclaimed King LONDON - With all the ancient ceremony that has been observed on such occasions for centuries past, George V was proclaimed [on May 9] King of Great Britain and Ireland and of the Dominions beyond the Seas, Defender of the Faith and Emperor of India, not in London only but in all parts of the kingdom. In London, in particular, the ceremony was marked with imposing scenes. Superb, in its imposing pomp, was the ceremony at St. James Palace. No less imposing, and perhaps more interesting by reason of the manner of it, was the quaint ceremonial at the entrance to the City where the old Temple Bar used to stand. From the steps of the Royal Exchange the proclamation was read in the presence of the Lord Mayor of London, surrounded by City officials in their robes and chains of state.

FROM OUR MAY 10 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO 1935: Hitler Shuns an Eastern Pact NEW YORK - "I would rather hang myself than sign an Eastern pact of mutual assis-tance." Chancellor Hitler says in an interview in the "Literary Digest" [on May 9]. "We will sign non-aggression pacts with all the world, provided we are treated fairly," the Filhrer said. "We will not sign a multilateral pact of mutual assistance in the East, for in no circumstances would Germans fight for Bolsheviki. Our nation simply would not march. We are ready and always have been ready to place our signature to any document whose full requirements can be foreseen and whose clear outlook is toward peace." Germany, Herr Hitler added. had renounced waging war over territorial questions. War, he declared, would now mean the ruin of the capitals of Europe from the air within an hour of its breaking out.

For a More Realistic and More European Germany

DARIS—It is time to count up the I damage done at the Born sum-mit. It chiefly was damage to Ger-man-French and to German-American relations, but beyond that there was damage to the West Germans' sense of solidarity with their allies.

The French were angered that Chancellor Kohl, grateful for President Reagan's Bitburg cemetery visit, gave him whatever he asked; indeed, that he scarcely waited for Mr. Rea-gan to ask. Thus President Mitterrand blocked agreement on world trade talks. But the French also understand perfectly well why Mr. Kohl did what he did, and that Bonn will turn now to patching things up with Paris. This much is less than serious. German-American relations seem, superficially, better than ever, since Mr. Reagan did make his pilgrimage to the Bitburg cemetery. But a new West German respect for Mr. Reagan is one thing. There is considerable bitterness as well that for Mr. Reagan to go to Bitburg required a considerable act of political courage. There is resentment at the scale of American popular opposition to what was, after all, meant to be a decent gesture or friendship between two nations that have been allies for 30 years.

There is bitterness that Americans, and others, on the one hand refuse to ignore Germany's past but depend on West Germany's military and eco-nomic contribution to the alliance, and, as many Germans see it, expect Germany to supply the battleground for a future Russian-American war. The West German "Greens" movement has fed upon this sense of vic-timization, offering a view of the contemporary world in which not only the German people but Germany's lands and forests are jeopardized by foreign forces beyond control.

The sentiment of victimization clearly exists on the right as well. Among the least happy things that have happened during this controversy was the argument made by some Germans which implied that to have fought against the Russian army during World War II was somehow to have provided a service to Western civilization that present-day Ameri-cans ought to acknowledge.

The Bundestag has in recent days passed the so-called "Auschwitz Lie" legislation, making it a crime to deny that the death camps existed, or to minimize the number of their victims but seeming to equate the death camp victims with those nearly 3 million Germans who died as a consequence of having been driven out of the east by the Russians at the war's end.

This seems to ignore the heavy fact that there would never have been any need to fight a Russian invasion of Central Europe, nor would there have been any Germans expelled from their homes in the east, had Germany not attacked the Soviet Union in 1941. Russia today dominates the East European nations, occupies Europe to the Elbe, partitions Germany, has annexed parts of prewar Poland, East Prussia, and Ruthenia - and the Cold War exists, with U.S. troops and nuclear weapons in West Germany today — all as a direct result of Germany's attack upon a Soviet Russia which at the time was doing its best to appease Hitler.

The geopolitical catastrophe that ensued, like the crime of the death camps, certainly is not the responsibility of Germans of the present generation. Germans, however, like the rest of us, have to live with the consequences, making the best of what was done by another generation.

The reconciliation of old enemies does not annul historical and geopolitical realities. This is an essential point. To say that Germany must bear the responsibility for its own and Europe's present division is not to hold present-day Germans to blame for the sins of their fathers. It is to say something different. Delicta maiorum immeritus lues, in Horace's By William Pfaff line: "Though guiltless, you must expiate your fathers' sins." So must we all. A ceremony in a cemetery is irrelevant to this.

Very bad things will come of this affair if the West German sense of estrangement from the allies is fueled. The solid, essential accomplishment of the postwar years has been West Germany's moral as well as economic and political integration into Western Europe. The enlarged European Community, however, no longer provides its members a responsive or very rewarding political instrument. Because America is the superpower, and the guarantor of West Germany, Germans have given relations with Washington priority over those with Paris, The Hague, Brussels, Rome and London. When Americans disappoint them, as in the Bitburg case, the shock is the greater for the investment that has been made in the American tie. Something constructive could result if Germans were influenced to take a more detached view of their strategic dependence on Washington, and were more seriously to consider the possibilities for improving security cooperation with the principal West European allies. The West German reaction to new initiatives in military cooperation taken by the West European Union ministers in April, and to the French "Eureka" proposals for more ambitious and military-related science and techno-logy, have met a guarded response in Bonn because of German sensitivity to what Washington thinks.

This is a misjudgment. Indeed, Americans as well as Germans need better to understand that it is a basic interest of the United States, as well as of Western Europe, that Europe steadily improve its ability to assure its own security — that the "Europe-an pillar" of the Western alliance be as solid as possible, capable of standing alone if necessary.

That way lies a trans-Atlantic relationship of confidence and munual respect, which would have no need for gramitous displays of the kind and suffered, at Bitburg.

Reagan Misconstrues a Terrible Century

OSTON - The essence of Ron-Boston — the essence at Bitburg. Confronted by the most pro-found questions of man's nature and responsibility, he responded with narrow ideology and warped history. "I am a Jew in a world still threatened by anti-Semitism," Mr. Reagan said after visiting the German military cemetery. "I am an Afghan, and I am a prisoner of the Gulag, I am a refugee in a crowded boat foundering off the coast of Vietnam, I am a Laotian, a Cambodian, a Cuban and a Miskito Indian in Nicaragua. I, too, am a potential victim of totalitarianism." So freedom-loving people around the world must say today.

That was brilliantly effective thet-oric. But think about the message. Every victim Mr. Reagan mentioned, after the reference to anti-Semitism. was a victim of communism. He was saying that the serious violations of human rights — the only ones worth mentioning in the shadow of the Holocaust - are all the work of Communist governments.

Not a thought there for those who have suffered and died in General Pinochet's Chile, for the Baha'i and other victims of religious terror in Iran, for the South Africans who live under institutionalized racist tyranny. Not a word of memory for the Armenians who died at the hands of Turks in this century's first genocide.

The point is not to play down the existence of cruelty in Communist regimes. The point is to recognize that inhumanity of appalling kinds may appear in all kinds of societies

It is by facing that fact that successive generations of West German political leaders have done so much to create a healthy Federal Republic, A perfect symbol of Mr. Reagan's attitude was his refusal to meet one of the bravest of those leaders, an early anti-Nazi, former Chancellor Willy Brandt.

Along with the zealot's one-eyed view of human rights, Mr. Reagan offered an extraordinary version of the great crime that left its imprint all around him: Nazism In his edited history, Nazi Germany was not a system, not a terrifying mass phenomenon, but the work of one man. "One man's totalitarian dictatorship" was Mr. Reagan's phrase for it. But Hitler was not alone. Millions voted for him, monthed his ideas, hated and killed with him. Seemingly ordinary men pushed Jews into gas chambers. And there are still advocates of fascism today.
In the Reagan memory, as displayed at Bithurg, there were mostly good Germans: teen-agers drafted into the army, "soldiers to whom Nalife," the mother and son in the Read-the woods on Christmas Day 1944. "We do not believe in collective

In his speech at the U.S. air base in Bitburg, Mr. Reagan said he had received many letters about his planned visit to the military cemetery: some supportive, some concerned, some opposed. He described only one, from a young Jewish wom-an who recently had had her bat mitzvah. "She urged me," Mr. Rea-gan said, "to lay the wreath at Bit-burg in honor of the future of Germany, and that is what we have done." The young woman was identified by the White House as Beth Flom of Mariboro Township, New Jersey. She told The Associated Press that in a message to the president on April 21 she made it clear that she disapproved of his visit to Bitburg.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Seeing the Difference Congratulations for the fine editorial on President Reagan's visit to Bitburg ("Bitburg: Time to Move On, May 3). It is obvious that the president was misled — not only by the no doubt well meaning Chancellor Kohl but also, far more seriously, by his own uninformed staff. The president would be better served, and the American people with him, if he would rely more on the advice of America's many competent Foreign Service officers abroad and less on his amateur White House coterie.

Their inability to distinguish be-tween Bitburg and Bergen-Belsen has harmed the United States around the world, as well as U.S.-German relations. It will take a long time to heal the freshly opened wounds and to

The uproar accompanying President Reagan's visit to a German military cemetery is a sad indictment of mankind's inability to forgive past transgressions. That the SS were re-sponsible for genocide will never be forgotten, but that is not the point here. Mr. Reagan's gesture represents a genuine attempt to heal old wounds and strengthen the Western alliance, and for this I salute him.

IBM's SNA, ISO's OSI

Regarding "Companies, Govern-ments Focus on International Stan-dards" (Office Automation, April 15): This report characterizes the International Standards Organization's Open Systems Interconnection (OSI) concept as a "challenger" and "counterbalance" to IBM's Systems Network Architecture (SNA). This is an erroneous perception.

SNA is IBM's proprietary network architecture for controlling the com-munications of data within a single system of computers and peripheral devices. Other manufacturers have their own proprietary network archi-tectures. In addition, IBM publishes detailed information about SNA that allows these manufacturers to design their products so they can be attached to SNA networks.

OSI is a non-proprietary architec-ture being developed by the Inter-national Standards Organization to control the communication of data between systems of different architectures. It is complementary to SNA and other proprietary architectures.

IBM has done as much as any company in the industry to support OSI, since its inception, as a set of internationally accepted standards for communications between systems. We participate in a number of national and international OSI standards development organizations, we have products supporting various OSI-related standards, and we have software under development in Europe that will provide support for the most recently defined OSI functions.

Isolationist Japanes 2 Look Again

Y EW YORK — Blanning the Jap-anese for the trade defect may make domestic political sense in the United States but it makes little logical sense. Apart from the broubaha over the U.S. Japanese trade deficit Japan's increased prosperity and ma-turity as a world power are by themselves making it more a part of the international mainstream, more cosmopolitan, more open to trade.

Consider the teen egers who spend Sunday afternoon in Tokyo's Yogogi Park. They gather by the hundreds and dance wildly to the hines of American rock music. For the hip-pest of the hip, only American Camel cigarettes will do—despite a law that forbids advertising American riga-rettes in Japanese. Real American Levi jeans are de rignem, and social standing is measured by the size of

An open Japan would also be open to products from Europe, China and other countries.

Elvis Presley tape collections. This is hardly a picture of a country closed to American products.

From Hariequin tomance novels to IBM mainframes, from Ralph Lauren to Kentucky Fried Chicken.

Lauren to Kentucky Fried Chicken. Japan actually buys most from the United States than any other country except Canada. This fact alone should give Americans passe before they are swept up in Japan-bashing. True, Japan's markets are fettered by regulation and cultime in ways that run against the grain of free trade, But even if the Japanese are nothing but American stakes and oranges, smoked nothing but American nothing but American steam and oranges, smoked nothing but American cigarettes, equipped their armed forces with nothing but American weapons and agreed to refrain from exporting a single car to America, the latter might still face a trade deficit as high as $20 billion with Japan.

Even if all regulations were lifted, there is no guarantee that American goods would significantly increase their market share. As open Japan would also be open to products from Europe, China and other Anan countries. In those commissioners it is far from certain that American products would be as competitive as some peowould be as competitive as some peo-ple on Capitol Hill finagins. Then there is the bigger trade picture. Japan accounts for only one-third of the worldwide American trade deficit. U.S. deficits with the European Community and with "new Japans" such as South Korea and Singapore have also grown markedly in some cases even laste than the imbalance with lapan lapan with its combination of prospecty and protectionism, just happens to be the most convenient scapegoat.

In the meantime, Americans tend to forget the very real benefit that their economy derives from trade with Japan. Consider the high-technology revolution. It could never have happened so rapidly or dramatically without the sharp decline in the price of silicon chips and other computer components - a decline spurred by the Japanese electronic industry, with its higher productivity, lower wages and aggressive competition with American companies. True, a flood of Japanese imports have cost some American jobs. But the long-term social and economic benefit to America - the creation of a large, new high-tech sector at a very low cost — is immense.

Or look more carefully at the $37-billion U.S. trade deficit with Japan last year, expected to grow to nearly $50 billion this year. The numbers sound frightening — until one realizes that all those surplus dollars and more are pumped back into the: American economy by Japanese investors, much of it into U.S. Treasury bills. This supply of investment dollars has helped keep U.S. interest rates lower than they might otherwise have been and allowed the American economy to continue growing with-ont significant inflation.

Of course, Americans need to improve their exporting capabilities if they are to remain competitive in an increasingly globalized marketplace. But Japan-bashing will hardly help.

The main concession produced by the "pressure" placed on Japan at the embarrassing speciacle of Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone imploring his people to have more American. ing his people to buy more American fondue sets and tennis rackets—as if.

America's was a colonial economy whose handicrafts could belp raise cash at a charity affair. To trade effectively, innovative ac-tion is needed from Washington, not charity from Tokyo. For example, the U.S. government should be taking measures to compete with the Japanese government's considerable sup-port for the development of fifthgeneration computers. Washington should be bolstering private-sector efforts to learn the exporting game. This may at first seem to run counter to U.S. economic traditions, but it is crucial in a world of "new Japans" — all of whose governments are helping to organize and finance export-driven economies.

The teen-agers in Yoyogi Park are growing up. As their generation mainres, Japanese isolation and conformity will invariably give way to greater openness and diversity.

But no matter how open Japan becomes, the ability to sell American goods there - and in the rest of the world, for that matter - will not be determined by the concessions extracted. It will depend on the products America has chosen to develop. and at what price, and on how shrew! Americans have become in mastering the global export business

Daris is a city to be visited, and Rome a capital to be seen. But London is a metropolis to be as to spoil your enjoyment of explored. Its narrow streets, hidden mews, ancient alleys, are not only a continual source of the main course. For this my delight, but scenes of never ending surprises. Where else can you stroll down Cloth Fair, Maiden Lane, Axe Court, Baker Street, Beggars Hill, Carbuncle Passage Way or Plantagenet Place.

What makes London so delightful is that half the fun is free. Top of the daily summertime bill is the changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace performed by the Queen's Guard.

closely, if you can, at the sup-banners, known as Colours. Like the eagles of the Roman legions, they are dedicated before being handed over to the regiment. They represent battle honours won in past wars when they were also a rallying point for men engaging the enemy.

Trooping the Colour

However impressive these cavalcades of marching men may be, the greatest, best and biggest of them all is Trooping the Colour which takes place on the official birthday of the Sovereign in mid-June. Tickets are available to members of the public to watch this two hour ceremony whose origins lie in the early 18th century when the Colour was marched, or 'trooped' before the regiment so that every soldier would learn to recognise his own Colour in the smoke of battle.

This is an occasion when visitors to London can see half a dozen members of the Royal Family in a single morning. get tickets for the main event, there is a dress rehearsal the previous Saturday which is just as glamorous and spectacular as the real thing. Only the Sovereign is missing.

Ceremony of the Keys

Another ceremonial occasion that is worth watching, if you can, is the oldest of them all. The 700 year old ritual of the Ceremony of the Keys is performed at the Tower of London when the Chief Warden, escorted by Yeoman Warders in their gold and silver uniforms that date back to the days of the first Queen Elizabeth, goes through the Tower each night ceremoniously locking the gates.

When he has done so he hands the keys to the Governor of the Tower. After this, to the river Thames.

The Blue-Collar Eloquence of David Mamet

by Samuel G. Freedman

EW YORK - The poker game starts at 7:30 every Wednesday night. It ends, David Mamet says, any time between 1:30 A.M. and noon Thursday. The men eat ham sand-wiches, drink beer and smoke a lot of cigars, and thousands of dollars move across the table. But if this sounds like a typical card game, it has its peculiarities. The regulars include a painter, a film professor and, in Mamet, a Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright.

And their conversation, for all the usual bluffing and cussing, often turns to art or literature or organic gardening.

If one can know a man by his rituals, then the poker night reveals something essential about David Mamet. His card game, like his writing, like his life, brings an intellectual sensibility to a working-class world. Mamet employs Aristotle's rules of drama to write about petty thieves and sleazy salesmen; he composes free verse out of grunts, sighs, obscenities and sentence fragments. In both his stark writing style and his fascination with the male tribe, Mamet resembles Ernest Hemingway more, perhaps, than any writer of his generation.

Over the last decade, Mamet has proved as prolific and as successful as any American playwright. After bursting onto the scene as a wunderkind with "American Buffalo" written and produced in 1975, when he was 27 — he has demonstrated a staying power rare in a field of fickle acclaim. Mamet endured some critical doubts in mid-career over plays like "The Woods," "Lone Canoe" and "Edmond," but he continued to write every day in his workmanlike way.

"The idea that one can become a better writer, a more famous writer, a richer writer, writer, a more famous writer, a noner writer, has been the ruination of many many writers," Mamet says, "and I do not plan to be one. It's like a guy who makes chairs. It's something I can do and I can do well. And obviously if I keep at it, within the limits of the form, I should get better at it in small increments. But the important thing is not my becoming a better chair maker, but the chair. You don't become better in general, the chairs become better."

In the last three years, Mamet's regimen has yielded the highly regarded screenplay for "The Verdict" and the caustic comedy "Glengarry Glen Ross," for which he won both the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Drama Critics Circle Award as the best American play of 1984. He won Tony nominations last year for both "Glengarry" as the best drama and "American Buffalo" as the best revival, a rare achievement. This year, Mamet has renewed his traditional ties to the Goodman Theater in Chicago. The theater staged his adaptation of Chekhov's "The Cherry Orchard" in March. Mamet's latest plays, the one-act dramas "The Shawl" and "The Spanish Prisoner," began performances recently at the Goodman's New Theater Company - an offshoot devoted to new American plays — and a revival of "The Water Engine" began recently on the Goodman's main stage. It amounts to a Chicago Mamet festival.

HAT is appropriate, for there is no better place to begin to talk about Mamet than Chicago. He grew up there, and references to the city pervade his plays. In the Goodman Theater and in its artistic director, Gregory Mosher — who has directed all but one of Mamet's 12 plays at the Goodman — Mamet has found a securi-ty few playwrights enjoy. Although Mamet now divides his time between a Chelsea town house and a Vermont farm, he still belongs to the lineage of Chicago writers. He echoes their direct style and their loathing of pre-

It seems logical that, since Mosher recently was named artistic director of the Vivian aumont and Mitzi Newhouse Theaters, at Lincoln Center in New York -Mamet's plays may have their premieres in New York. Mosher, however, is retaining his ties to Chicago as artistic director of the New Theater Company. In any case, that would not make Mamet any less of a Chicago writer. for more than sharing a landscape with his literary forebears, Mamet shares a state of

"It carries with it a certain intolerance for "It carries with it a certain intolerance for the purely ornamental," he says of the Chi-cago literary tradition, "and a great support for the idea of brashness and the application of the individual intellect. Chicago is: "Have a good time, get a girl, have a beer." There's also the idea of completion, of production. You don't have guys sitting around in cafes with cigarettes trembling — 'Oh, my God. with cigarettes trembling — 'Oh, my God, I'm a writer, but I can't write.' Well, in Chicago, the answer is, 'Go home, you sissy. If you're a writer, write."

Hemingway, too, was a Chicago writer. That he has fallen into a certain disrepute too macho for the age of feminists and the "sensitive man" - makes the parallel with Mamet even more apt. At 37, Mamet seems part of his generation only by the accident of birth date. He has rejected both the suburban experience of the 1950s and the counterculture of the '60s, embracing instead the sort of life to which Hemingway's Nick Adams might have aspired. With his broad chest and round shoulders, his down vest and his close-cropped black hair, Mamet looks more like a millwright than a play-

At a time when his contemporaries in theater often turn to Freudian exploration of family themes, Mamet writes out of a wider set of experiences. "Glengarry" derives from a job in a high-pressure real-estate office, "Lakeboat" from a summer on a Great Lakes ore boat, "American Buffalo" from a series of poker games with the ex-convicts who frequented a Chicago junk shop.

Mamet stands apart from many of his peers not only as an experiential writer, but as a self-taught one. Mamet initially wanted to become an actor and when he was 20 started writing scenes for himself and friends to practice. Within four years, he had formed a theater company, and had become its resident playwright.

"I never really wanted to be a writer," he says. "I never spent any conscious time de-voted to the philosophy or technique of writing until I'd been writing for a long time. Sherwood Anderson talks in one of his stories about how he was writing advertising copy for a living and one day he just started writing a story instead. And he looked at it and said, 'My God, that's writing. I can do that. How about that," "

Mamet presents himself as both an average Joe and an intellectual. His style is to say.

Mamet's card game, like his writing, like his life, brings an intellectual sensibility to a working-class world.

"ain't" in one sentence and quote Jung and Tolstoy in the next. He wears a crumpled baseball cap with the insignia "Twelfth

It is no accident that Mamet often writes in a cabin without electricity, that he abhors the very idea of a word processor. To bim, writing is a craft, a job. He is utterly uninter-ested in discussing his writing process — "The process is not important. What differ-ence does it make?" — and when he does talk about writing, he is likely to grab hold of a handmade chair in his kitchen and liken himself to its maker. He loves writing in part because it involves producing something tangible, something he can bold and read and ultimately see on stage. Mamet's blue-collar ethic insists on preparation, on daily discipline. Far from being a modernist, as some critics deem him, he is a traditionalist in both process and product.

If one theme recurs in Mamet's plays, it is the exploitation of the weak by the strong, of the individual by the institution. The salesmen of "Glengarry," hurled into combat by a sales contest with a Cadillac as prize, turn on one another, their customers and their boss. In "The Water Engine," which Mamet subtitled "An American Fable," a man discovers an engine that can run on water; his rivals steal and destroy the machine and ultimately murder him. One can view the thieves of "American Buffalo" as Mamet's analogs to big-business men.

His new one-act plays both derive, in different ways, from confidence games. In "The Shawl," a psychic and his homosexual lover try to relieve a customer of her $700,000 inheritance by playing upon her vulnerability and trust. "The Spanish Prisoner," which takes its title from a con game, is essentially one man's denunciation of the abusive society around him. "The sole test of life is the will to exploit," the man says at one point. "Whoever does not possess this will must die." His sense of outrage is clearly Mamet's own.

UCH plays have earned Mamet a reputation as the chief critic of capitalism among American playwrights. He did, after all, entitle an essay about advertising "A Nation of Pimps." But it is too simple to hang any political label on Mamet, for he is probably more of a libertarian than a liberal or conservative. The salesman Ricky Roma in "Glengarry" declares: "I swear, it's not a world of men. It's not a world of men. It's a world of clock-watchers, bureaucrats, officeholders. . . . There's no adventure to it. . . . We are the members of a dying breed."

"The problem of our age," Mamet says, "is that society is tending toward the totali-tarian in all aspects. Obviously, it's clear in the Eastern bloc countries. It's less obvious in this country, but it's nonetheless true. Conglomeration, the disappearance of individual initiative, the inability of the individual to address grievances. If you look at both Western and Eastern civilization, you say something's going on here. It's obviously not a trick of the light. You have two disparate systems and in spite of their philosophical systems, and in spite of their philosophical differences they are heading in the same direction. Something is happening in human

The hero, then, is the person who can resist. In "Glengarry," it is the most hapless of the salesmen, but the one who can mutter, in one of the last lines of the play, "Oh, God, I hate this job."

"Maybe what I'm saying in the plays is that human nature does not change, but individual nature does." Mamet says. "So that the only redemption for the individual is not to change with the institution, not to become part of the institution."

In other plays, Mamet's societal concerns boil down to the difficulty, almost the impossibility, of individual connection. "A Life in the Theater" and "Squirrels" - about the relationships between a young and old actor and a young and old writer, respectively address themselves to the search for a mentor, for continuity across generations. Even in "The Shawl," the psychic is trying to teach his craft to his lover, a younger man. Plays

Europe's Summer Festivals: Tradition, Music and the Box Office

by John Rockwell

David Mamet

UROPEAN summer festivals are best symbolized by Bayreuth in West Germany and Salzburg in Austria. They are the two oldest and grandest of the large scale, international-style events, and between them they define what such festivals can and should be These days, though, every European village seems to gather together a few musicians and call the convocation a festival, and there are some economic reasons as well as musical ones for that.

Bayreuth is the classic festival created in fulfillment of a single vision. That vision was by Richard Wagner, of course, and its subject was himself. What makes Bayreuth so special is the very single-mindedness of the experience. If you don't much like Wagner, you shouldn't be there in the first place. If you do like Wagner, any flaws in perfor-mance or production — and under the shaky leadership of the less talented of the two Wagner grandsoms, Wolfgang, there have been plenty of such flaws in recent years— will be swept aside by the intensity of the Salzburg is a festival on a different model. Yes, its focal point is Mozart, the city being his birthplace. But Salzburg's true purpose, when it was founded in the early 1920s, was to provide a festival paradigm of the fragmented Hapsburg Empire — an Austrian artistic image of a cosmopolitan, heterogeneous entity bound together in a communal spirit. Thus the festival offers a little bit of a lot of different things, but it can all work as a unifying experience because of the concentration of artistic energies, the charm of the city and even the touristic bustle that can otherwise seem so distracting. It is also, be warned, mercilessly expensive.

F those two festivals are the models, there are others that speak to more con-L temporary impulses. Many recently founded testivais seem to owe their origins to nonmusical motives. That doesn't mean they aren't interesting or enjoyable, but it does mean that they may have been planned to attract tourists and foreign currency, to fulfill union contracts or simply to provide local opera subscribers with gala casts at inflated prices.

Festivals of this sort usually lack the concentrated time span and thematic unity of the smaller, more focused attractions. They spread over entire cities or even countries, if the countries are compact enough. Examples of such nationwide festivals are those of Flanders and the Netherlands, both full of good things that a tourist should pick by event; it makes no sense to "go to the Holland Festival" as a thing in itself.

The best-known city festivals are those of Munich, which is basically the Bavarian

State Opera gussied up with flossier casts than usual and more expensive tickets, and the Vienna Festival, which besides its own productions and visiting attractions, calls on almost all of the city's theaters and musical ensembles. The Berlin Festival — actually festivals, since East Berlin's begins just as West Berlin's is ending — is another example of such a citywide effort, in which the various cultural organizations of a given city are coordinated and mobilized to special efforts; so are Florence's Maggio Musicale, the Edinburgh Festival, the Lucerne Festival and the Israel Festival in Jerusalem.

In Eastern Europe, Dresden's festival should be particularly glamorous this year

In Search of García Lorca

by Mary Peirson Kennedy

ADRID - "He has a halo of sanctity that almost no other writer has ever had . . . his assassination catapulted him into world fame."

Ian Gibson, 47, is speaking of his favorite subject — the Spanish poet, dramatist, com-poser, writer Federico Garda Lorca, whose biography he is in the process of completing. With much fanfare the first volume of 700 pages, "Federico Garcia Lorca: de Funte Vaqueros a Nueva York, 1898-1929" (Edito-nal Grijalbo, Barcelona, 2,500 pesetas) was launched in Madrid April 24 at the National Theater, which is currently presenting one of the last two plays Lorca wrote, "La Casa de Bernarda Alba." The author hopes to have the second volume come out next year to coincide with the 50th anniversary of Lorca's death at age 38, on Aug. 19, 1936, at Viznar, in the province of Granada.

Gibson, an Irishman who became a Spanish citizen last year, has written the biography in Spanish, but an English version is scheduled to come out next year at the same time as the second volume in Spanish.

This biography, I suppose, began 20 years ago, although I only started putting it together seven years ago, Gibson said.
"When I went back to my notes about my time in Granada in 1965 they were very complete. There was a great deal about Lorca that had nothing to do with his death
... all along I had been unconsciously preparing to write more."

The Nationalist Repression in Granada in 1936 and The Death of Federico Garcia Lorca" by Gibson was first published in 1971. It was the result of a year in Granada, originally planned as a year off from his post as lecturer in Spanish at Queen's University in Belfast to work on his thesis, the poetry of

"When I got there and started to talk to people, I soon discovered that everyone thought I had come to write about the death of Lorca." This was a brutally forbidden subject in those days under Franco, but Gibson soon realized that as a foreigner people would talk to him, say things that they wouldn't say to another Spaniard out of fear. And in the end it was the poet's death that he wrote about, not his life or his poetry.

After being turned down by several English publishers, the book first came out in Spanish, published by Ruedo Therico in Paris, that great salvation during the Franco years for many Spanish and foreign authors. After the book won the Prix International de Presse de Nice in 1972, British publishers suddenly took interest and Gibson was quickly established as a Lorca authority. To date it has been published in 14 languages, one of the most recent being Russian.

In doing that first book, Gibson discovered he had an ability for research that he wasn't aware of, an indefatigable drive in poring over notes, letters, newspapers and above all talking to people. "Or better said, listening to people. Sometimes I found people would go onto another subject which would have nothing to do with Lorca, or so it seemed, but all of a sudden they had told me case of Lorca, his homosecuality was (and in something very useful."

Ian Gibson at work.

According to Gibson, Spain is a difficult. Nationalists, after having killed him used a place to do research. Years of scholarly neglect have taken their toll, bibliographies are not plentiful, smaller libraries lack cataloging, things are in disorder. One of his biggest problems was the abundance of anecdotes about Lorca, some of them simply not true.

Has he come up with new facts? "A few, a few unpublished photos." The family of Federico, as he is known all over the country, was most cooperative and showed him any correspondence he asked to see. The nephew of the poet, Manuel Fernandez Montesinos Garcia, is head of the Federico García Lorca Foundation, which has in practically all of the Lorca correspondence besides many other things, including the manuscript of an only recently published play, "Los Sueños de Mi Prima Aurelia" (The Dreams of My Cousin Aurelia), which with "La Casa de Bernarda Alba" Lorca was preparing for production when he was shot. "Federico, you know." said Gibson, "was not some kind of a strange duck that turned out to be a talented genius. His was an artistic family full of vitality, energy and ability themselves. They sang, wrote, some cases still is) denied or ignored. The smear campaign against the poet in order to confuse the facts surrounding the Franco confuse the facts surrounding the Franco government's order to shoot him.

Lorca's great friendship was with Salvador Dali. They met when they were both students in Maddid and part of the first volume is devoted to this friendship and to the time that Lorca spent in Catalonia, especially in the 1920s and '30s in Cadaque's, the willows where Dali still lives Much of the village where Dali still lives. Much of the information comes from Dali himself and from his sister, Ana Maria Dali, who wrote a book entitled "Salvador Dali, Visto Por su Hermana" (as seen by his sister). There is a touching passage in the book when the author tells about Holy Week of 1925 when, at Dali's insistence, Lorca read alond his latest play, "Mariana Piñeda."

Putting forth all his talents as an actor, Lorca threw himself into the roles, and as the cliché goes, there wasn't a dry eye in the house. Dali looked at them all, as if to say, "See, didn't I tell you?"

Gibson emphasizes that his biography is not an official one, although as far as he knows it is the only one coming out for the anniversary of the poet's death. In spite of all that has been written on Lorca, this is the first complete biography, dealing with all the aspects of his short life.

Gibson admits he sometimes feels strange

Teatime in the Heart of Texas

by Elaine Davenport

USTIN, Texas - A Dutchman and a Frenchman in charge of afternoon tea, English style, in the capital of Texas? Improbable but true, and a great success.

"It's really taken off," says Ian van Riems-dyk, general manager of the old Stephen F. Austin Hotel, just down Congress Avenue from the state capitol. "It's a must for any deluxe hotel and I think it's a very nice tradition, too," says Jean Loubat, the food and beverages director.

No cowboys have appeared yet for the ritual, but a plate of chocolate chip cookies is on hand, just in case. "After all, this is Texas," says Loubat.

More traditional afternoon tea fare includes scones, cucumber sandwiches, tarts and cakes, eclairs, and a choice of tea - Earl Grey, Darjeeling, Jasmine and Orange Pe-koe. Coffee and soft drinks are included in the $5.95 price, but alcoholic beverages are extra. (Champagne is very popular.)

" Ladies come and stay the whole time, from 3 to 5 P.M.," says Tina, a tea waitress.
"They try a little bit of everything and just talk and talk." Friday is the most popular says van Riemsdyk. "I think Texans are the most history-oriented Americans," he says.

"Austin is a capital with a lot of history. And Texans are very friendly. They like Europeans, from the old continent, because they also have an old history."

The afternoon tea takers were happily proving him right. Seated on comfortable sofas and high backed chairs in a setting reminiscent of a grandmother's stylish living room, groupings of hotel guests and Austin-ites were eyeing the pastry cart.
"We lived in London for six years," said

Jerri McReynolds, a native Texan. "The ambience is as nice as in London - like at Brown's Hotel." Her husband, Don, a retired oil executive, said the food was not as plentiful as in London, but very nice, any-

NDEED, you might expect the Texas teacart to be overflowing with bigger and better everything. "We keep it small," says Loubat, "with a few selections. It's not a large buffet full of food."

like the recent "Goldberg Street" and "The Disappearance of the Jews" deal with assimilation and the loss of ethnic identity emong Jews. "Somebody said that progress occurs when two generations agree," Mamet says.

"I would say happiness occurs then. But the generations have not agreed in this country for a long time. That's what really fell down after the Second World War. And that's the story of my generation of Americans." He returns to the chair. "Look at this," he says. 'It's a beautiful old Windsor chair. I bought it at an auction. We needed some more chairs for the house, so I gave this to a chair maker down the road to copy. Now, he never had anyone who taught him how to make this kind of chair. It took him 20 years of working on different chairs, reading books just to learn how to make a Windsor. So there you have a thousand years of knowledge breaking down. That knowledge disappeared in the 20th century."

In a more specific sense, Mamet's concern with legacy arises from the instability he felt in his own upbringing. He was born Nov. 30, 1947, in Chicago. His parents, Lenore (who died nine months ago) and Bernard, were both Jewish, the children of immigrants, but Mamet felt they rejected their Eastern European past in the desire to assimilate. The family first lived in South Shore, then a largely Jewish middle-class neighborhood, but moved when Mamet was 13 to Olympia Fields — a suburb the playwright calls "New South Hell." Mamet sought the ethnic and community bonds he missed by drawing close to his paternal grandmother — "She was from the shtetl. Real simple, real loving. She adored me and I adored her" — and by exploring Chicago on weekends, sometimes sleeping in Jackson Park on weekend nights. Mamet's parents divorced when he was

10, and although he refuses to talk at length about the effects on him, they seem profound. Mamet's unsettled childhood also may explain the hostility and profauity so evident in his plays. Asked where he refined his ear for insults and obscenities, Mamet replied, "In my family, in the days prior to television, we liked to while away the evenings by making ourselves miserable, solely based on our ability to speak the language viciously. That's probably where my ability was honed."

IT GOING,

Mamet has written several children's plays and a children's book, which are as poignant as they are fantastic. He married the actress Lindsay Crouse in December 1977 - and their life in Vermont, with its woodstove and homemade apple butter, seems an attempt by two urbanites to reinvent themselves as Ma and Pa Kettle. By all accounts, Mamet especially delights in the couple's 2-year-old

But it takes more than the sum of experi-ence, however powerful or wrenching to make a writer. Robert Brustein, a drama critic for The New Republic and the artistic director of the American Repertory Theater in Cambridge, Mass, cites several distinctive elements in Mamet's work. Mamet uses aspects of naturalism - in medias res openngs, slice-of-life format - but he writes with a moral underpinning that Brustein says is rare in naturalistic plays. The reason that moral sense may not be obvious, Brustein suggests, is that Mamet lets stage action —a fight, a burglary, an argument — rather than speechmaking carry his plays.

"He manages to embody the entire meaning of the play in the action," Brustein said.

"He's not didactic or tendentious. There are none of those moments when a character comes to the front of the stage and says, 'Attention must be paid.' But you leave the theater after a Mamet play and realize it's exploded in your brain. You're asking questions about the nature of our society. His writing might be called behavioristic, but that's too sociological a word, because he's a poet, too. Call him a behavioristic poet."

HE relationship between Mamet and Mosher is central to the writer's success. Few American playwrights, even the very finest, know any stability. One year, they win the Pulitzer Prize, the next they get rejection letters. It is not surprising, then, that some of the most accomplished play-wrights — Lanford Wilson, Sam Shepard, Marnet - are those who can depend on one theater and one director.

Mames and Mosher operate on a kind of honor system. Mamet usually writes in the seclusion of his Vermont home - the cabin outside it, to be precise — and Mosher waits.
"I might hear David's working on a play and have a vague idea what it's about," he says. "It's not like 20 pages of notes come in the mail. And that's not surprising knowing David's aesthetic." When the two men begin rehearsals of a play, a system of mutual support takes over. Mamet is that relatively. rare playwright who adores and trusts ac-tors. He says he takes his cues on cutting or changing lines from the actor's ease in speaking them. And Mosher is a director willing to subordinate his vision and ego to that of the

This points up one drawback of the Goodman approach. For all the support, for all the familial feelings, it also cedes to a playwight — especially a gifted and strong-willed one like Mamet - almost total autonomy. Mamet is surrounded by people who owe their-careers to his plays, people who might well be loath to dispute him.

"I would follow David to the ends of earth because of his willingness to follow his beliefs," William Macy, the actor, says. "But he can be hard to budge. I'm pretty sure one of the reasons David didn't like acting is that he wasn't in charge. I think he goes out of his way to surround himself with people who won't question him. It's not as though you, can't dissent. But David comes from a greattradition in theater: the director, or in his case the writer, is in charge of the play, and you can do it his way or you can quit."

Mamet's certainty usually serves him well, but in the case of "Lone Canoe" it led to failure. With "Lone Canoe," Mamet left the contemporary urban milieu of "American Buffalo" and "Sexual Perversity" to write about a 19th-century explorer who must choose between returning to his native England or remaining in a mopian Indian vil-lage in Canada. The play was overtly philo-sophical, a meditation on Big Issues, and the language was stilted, even pretentious. The underlying problem, Mamet suggests, was overconfidence.

The danger is feeling you have it licked like with 'Lone Canoe,' Mamet says. 'That play was in one of those periods where I thought I had it all licked. Did you evergamble? 'Aha,' you say, why do all these silly idiots risk their money and lose it when all you have to do is blah, blah, blah. Next thing you know, you're waking up in the Traveler's Aid Society. That to a certain extent, is what happened to me with Lone

T was 11:30 P.M. at JFK Airport in New York. Pan Am flight 82 had been tarmac for about 45 minutes when the pilot came over the intercom: "Ladies and gentlemen, I know you're angry and have been hadly treated, but I do ask you to be patient for a few minutes longer. The mechanics are still working on number two engine and I expect to have some news momentarily." Shortly before midnight the engine cowling was replaced, the engines started up and the plane cleared for takeoff.

Of course, delays like this are familiar to the seasoned traveler. And who can blame an airline for a last moment hydraulics problem? The point is, that although the first-class passengers had been fed and watered and offered a free same in the Clipper Club, where the air-conditioning had broken down, everyone else, according to a young couple in business class who had arrived that afternoon from Los Angeles, had been left to the slender resources of a $7.50 voucher during their six-hour wait. An elderly American lady said she had chosen Pan Am because it was a nonstop flight, but would fly Air France next time. One wag ventured that perhaps this was supposed to be an inaugural daytime flight. More to the point; said someone else, they might have offered everyone a less of charmenes.

Me that he serve a trip to Nice.

It is probably unfair to single out this flight for criticism. But it was just three days after its inauguration on April 28 as the first nonstop service between New York and Nice. And although there was nothing to complain about once in the air - the cabin staff was friendly and efficient - the expericace did nothing to enhance Pan Am's com-petitive edge as this troubled airline prepares to shed its Pacific routes and plans its renais-sance on the North Atlantic.

On April 28, Pan Am also mangurated a daily nonstop New York-Hamburg service as well as services to Amsterdam, Athens, Belgrade, Bucharest and Vienna. "Adding these cities makes Pan Am the largest U.S. flag carrier on the North Atlantic," says John Krimski, Pan Am's senior vice president for marketing. The airline has added a second daily flight from New York to Paris and now flies nonstop from Los Angeles and Washington to Frankfurt, Detroit to London and Washington to London.

It is no coincidence that a couple of weeks ago. Pan Am announced the sale of its Pacifago, Pan Am announced the sale of its Pacific division to United Airlines for $750 million. According to Krimski, the total value of the deal, which includes the sale of 18 airlion. According to Krimski, the total value of the deal, which includes the sale of 18 aircraft (11 long-range Boeing 747-SPs, 6-Tri-Stars and one DC-10) is about $900 million, which makes it the largest transaction in aviation history, exceeding the record $750 million that Pan Am paid for National Airlines in 1981. United, the world's largest airline outside the Soviet bloc, is fulfilling a longstanding ambition by acquiring Pan Am routes to destinations like Tokyo, Beijing, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Singapore and Sydney. It is taking them on as a going concern, along with 2,700 Pan Am employees, including 410 pilots. It was Juan Trippe, the founder of Pan Am, who pioneered these routes 50 years ago. All that remains will be Pan Am's service to Hawaii, which is part of its domestic network.

Pan Am's retreat from the Pacific (23 percent of its revenue last year, second only to the Atlantic, 43 percent) which is the world's fastest growing airline market, was a strategic necessity. Pan Am had an operating loss of $223 million in 1984 (the only major U.S. airline that failed to make a profit) which brings its cumulative losses over the ast four years to $762 million. It has a debt stimated at $1 billion. A monthlong strike pread over March and April further depleted its resources. According to a Pan Am spokesman in London, the airline would have needed to invest $1.2 billion to re-equip its Pacific fleet with long-range Boeing 747-300s (which cost more than $110 million each) and develop a feeder network into the West Coast gate-ways, which United already has. "We didn't have the resources to do this. The United deal should reduce our debt equity ratio from 6:1 to 0.75:1. It gears us to make full use of our Airbus order and develop Europe; the Middle East, Africa, the Caribbean and South America," he says.

Pan Am recently placed orders with Airbus Industrie for A320s and A310-300s at a potential cost of $1 billion. The former will be used as feeder aircraft in the U.S. and Europe, while the twin-engined A310-300s, due for delivery in two to three years, may ultimately be used in extended range operations on the Atlantic.

Many of Pan Am's current problems stem from the National Airlines acquisition — ill-timed in retrospect — which coincided with the upheavals of U. S. deregulation and the economic recession. Says Krimski: "Pan Am suffered from not having a U.S. domestic network and in the merger with National bled itself of tremendous resources. We sold our hotels, our building, all at a time when business was falling off. It was a serious

Last year, Pan Am's domestic operations, which accounted for 20 percent of its revenue, made an operating loss of about $280 million. This compares with profits of $100 million on the Atlantic and $50 million on the Pacific. The airline has been bedeviled by infelicitous timing According to Krimski, a "prime component" of the Pacific sale is that the long-range economics of Pan Am's existing 747 fleet are not as attractive on the Pacific as in Europe and South America. The reason is that eight years ago, Pan Am purchased Boeing 747-SPs, a small version of the wide-bodied 747, carrying half the number of passengers (250 compared with 450). At that time the SP was the only plane capable of long-range operations. But today, the 747-300 has the same range and a significantly lower cost per seat-mile. "We fly two 747-SPs a day from New York to Tokyo, whereas Japan Airlines flies one wide-bodied 747. They're flying half the number of planes, half the crew, half the number of engines for the same revenue." Krimski cays.

had the crew, had the humber of english for the same revenue," Krimski says.

Pan Am is counting on getting the eco-nomics right for its entrepreneurial push into Europe. This will depend on the load factor -how many people are sitting in the plane and how much they pay - especially on thinner routes such as Nice. Value for money in first class and business class, which will account for about a third of the flight revenue, is important, especially when compared with the high quality of in-flight service provided by some European carriers. (Will the business traveler be prepared to pay a premium of around 12 percent for "Chapper Class" in Pan Am?) And additional capacity. is being provided by other U.S. carriers. For example, American and Delta are now flying nonstop to Paris from Dallas and Atlanta

Krimski is confident. The secondary cities we now serve will open up market oppor-tunities we never had," he says. At JFK, Pan Am is promoting its "World Port" terminal, e you can ch domestic flights under one roof. For business travelers, there is a free helicopter service to Manhattan and Newark. And Pan Am's "World Pass" may be the frequent flier program offering the most benefits; the big payoff is two passes for 30 days of interna-tional travel when you reach 175,000 miles. But according to Krimski, the key to the leisure market is innovative fares, a hard thing to achieve in Europe's restrictive legislative climate. In April, Pan Am ran ads in the United States for introductory one-way fares of $199 from New York to Nice and Hamburg and $249 one way to Amsterdam, Athens, Belgrade, Budapest and Vienna, and set to "government approval." The only restrictions were midweck travel with a $50 weekend surcharge. The fare to Hamburg has been accepted by West Germany, but that to Nice was summarily rejected by Air France. This means that the cheapest promotional round-trip fare between New York and Nice is $779 for both airlines.

Nevertheless, Krimskl expects to get a thousand new tour passengers a week to Nice, "I will certainly make money to Nice this summer," he says. "But I've got to have some interesting pricing opportunity for the off-season. The three major components for stimulating this market are price, price and Aggressive marketing, additional capacity and pressure from tourist agencies and consumers may yet open up Nice and other markets to healthier competition. But if Pan Am is to succeed, its product will have to match the promise of the promotion.

A Busy Springtime in London

by Jo Thomas

ONDON — The endless days of spring and summer, when the light lingers long past 10 P.M., offer a perfect time to visit London. If you are coming from the United States, the strength of the dollar makes it easier to stay here, although you may find yourself compelled to buy another suitcase before you leave.

Bring your sense of humor and brace yourself for crowds of Americans buying up the place and living like kings. Try, however, to make your hotel reservations early. The American Bar Association has London practically booked up from July 9 to 22, but at other times there are still delightful places to stay in a wide price range. Avoid scheduling anything on May 27 or Ang. 26. They are bank holidays and everything — from banks to galleries and museums — is closed.

There are many guides to London and its history and taxi drivers are a fine source of history, and taxi drivers are a fine source of information, but if you want to see a lot in a short time, a few hours on a tour is recom-

London Transport offers a double-decker bus tour to Westminster Abbey, the sights of bus tour to Westmanster Abbey, the signs of —and historic gossip about — the West End and, when possible, the Changing of the Guard ceremony at Buckingham Palace. The price is the equivalent of $10, $6.25 for children. The tour leaves at 10 A.M. from Wilton Road Coach Station, near Victoria Station, and returns at 1 P.M. Book through Leader Temperator of through your batel or London Transport or through your hotel, or call 222-1234.

If you decide to show yourself around, London Transport has free maps, but a street guide called "A to Z (here called A to Zed) Inner London in Super Scale" is especially useful. It's small, costs $2.60, and can be purchased at many bookshops.

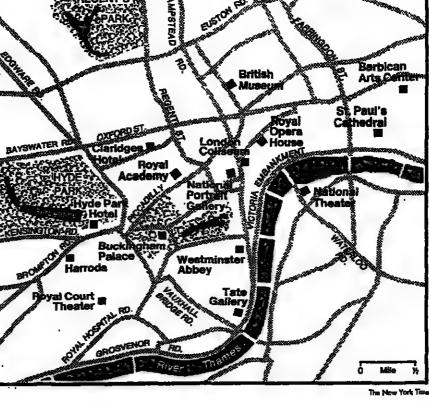

HIS is the 400th birthday of the City of Westminster and the 300th birth-day of George Frederick Handel, and if you happen to be here on July 13 don't miss the free concert at the Serpentine in Hyde Park, which will start at 10 P.M. and combine Handel's "Royal Freworks Music" and "Water Music" with a fireworks display launched from rafts. The music will be performed by André Previn and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Royal Opera in Convent Garden is offering five performances in May of "Samson et Dalila" with Placido Domingo and Agnes Baltsa. In June and July you can see Jessye Norman or Rosalind Plowight in "Ariadna and Naxos" and Frederica you Stade in "La Donna del Lago." (Tickets £7 to £37, about $8.50 to $45.) A high point of the summer will be the English National Opera's new production of Michael Tippett's "The Midsummer Marriage" at the London Coliseum in May and June, (£3.50 to £15.50.)

The Royal Ballet is presenting "The Sleeping Beauty" and "Les Sylphides" in May, "Swan Lake" in May and July, and "Romeo and Juliet" in Angust (£4.50 to £21.)

On stage, Ian McKellen is in "Coriolanus" on Olivier stage of the National Theatre May 31 and June 1. Michael Frayn's version of Chekhov's "Wild Honey" will be at the Lyt-telton May 15 to 23. (£5.50 to £11.50.) The Royal Shakespeare Company is presenting "Richard II." "Hamlet" and "Henry V" in May and June at the Barbican. (£4 to £11,50.) In a large industrial paint depot at 98A

Boundary Road in St. John's Wood, an elegant private gallery of contemporary art has opened. It is London's newest museum, and it still has no name. Charles Saatchi, of the advertising firm of Saatchi & Saatchi, and his wife, Doris, have collected the work of artists they admire and are showing a small part of their collection, the work of Andy Warhol, Donald Judd, Brice Nauman, Richard Serra, Cy Twombly and Bruce Mardea. It is open from noon to 6 P.M. Friday and Saturday and on other days by appoint-ment. (624-8299.)

The British Museum (Great Russell Street, WCI) is opening seven new sculpture galleries in the basement to show the bulk of its Greek and Roman collection, some 1,500 objects that have not been on display since 1939. They include exhibits from two of the seven wonders of the ancient world: figures from the tomb of Mausolus at Halicarnassus -which gave the word "mausoleum" to the world - and carvings from the Temple of Artemis at Ephesus. (Monday through Saturday, 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., Sundays from 2:30 to 6 P.M. Admission is free.)

The universal favorites seem to be the zoo at Regent's Park, which has a children's zoo (admission is $4 for adults and $2 for children, 9 to 6 Monday to Saturday and 9 to 7 Sunday); Hamley's 188 Regent Street, a toy store that can only be described as colossal, and the Science Museum (Exhibition Road, SW7), which is connected to the Natural History Museum so you can walk next door for the dinosaurs. (Monday to Saturday 10 to 6 P.M., Sunday 2:30 to 6. Free.)

For a reliable baby sitter try Childminders at 935-2049 or 935-9763. There is a registration fee of $3.75, but the hourly charges are reasonable (from about $2 to $2.50 an hour, depending on the time and day), and the sitters are available on very short notice.

Shopping is nothing less than breathtaking in London, if you are looking for a good buy. Clothes, especially woolens and cashmeres, are favorites, as are antiques and china. The latest prices on Burberry raincoats are the equivalent of $285 for men and $269 for women (including 15 percent Value Added Tax, which is refundable).

ANY shoppers start at Harrods, which has everything, or at Marks & Spencer on Oxford Street, which has wonderful clothes and low prices. Marks & Spencer takes no credit cards, has no dressing rooms, and will take traveler's checks only in pounds. Women's cashmere sweaters in a classic pullover style at Marks & Spencer are $53 and come in gray, navy, camei or red. Men's cashmeres come in more colors, including yellow and light blue, and seem to be even better in quality at $69. Beautiful all-cotton sweaters sell for $15 for women and $17.50 for men. Lamb's-wool pullovers are $14 for women or men.

The Scotch House in Knightsbridge is famous for quality knitwear, kilts and plaid materials. A classic cashmere sweater costs from $80 to $125, while a hand-knitted cash-mere sweater is $250. A plain cashmere sweater dress is $150.

There is enormous variety at Gray's Antique Market, open Monday through Friday only, during business hours. Take the underground to the Bond Street station and walk down the street past the Hog in the Pound Pub. The shops in the market offer everything from antique toys and jewelry to swords and helmets. A sterling silver dress-ing table set — comb, brush and mirror — in fine condition was $130. Heavy silver frames are $125 to $250, and crystal perfume bottles with silver tops go for about $175. You can bargain with many of the dealers.

The largest collection of British porary glass can be found at Coleridge, which has its main gallery at 192 Piccadilly. Items include Anthony Stern's bright vases ($330 to $500), subtle landscapes by William Walker ($290 to $375) or plates by Brian Blanthorn ($1,000 and up). You can also find glass nuggets and marbles from about

For china, you might try Harrods or walk a short distance to the Reject Shop at 183 Brompton Road, at the corner of Beauchamp Place, which sells perfect china at popular prices. The best-selling Royal Albert Old Country Rose goes for $174 at the Reject Shop and at $193 at Harrods for a service for eight five-piece place settings. Coalport Countryware is $155 at the Reject Shop and $172 at Harrods, also for a service

ENE Bajard, who was head chef at Le Gavroche, Britain's leading French restaurant for 10 years, has just opened Mazarin (30 Winchess Swel) in Pimlico. The menu is French and small - two fish and two meat dishes, appetizers and cheese or a dessert. You can choose from four good and simple wines, included in the price. We had cream of leek soup, lamb with tarragon sauce, a warm puff pastry with grapes and a bottle of Muscader. (Monday through Saturday, dinner only, 7 to 11:30, $27 a person, Tel; 828-3366.)

For attentive service and very good food in beautiful surroundings, Rue St. Jacques, just one block off Oxford Street at 5 Charlotte Street, W1, is recommended. The German chef, Gunther Schlender, was offering grilled gninea fowl in a juniper-berry-fla-vored sauce recently, but the menu changes frequently, offering the best of what is in season. You're now likely to find new lamb with Madeira sauce or grilled duck with ginger and honey. (Monday through Friday, 12:30 to 2:15 and 7:15 to 11:15; $70 for two, tax and service included. Tel: 637-0222.)

A third choice, especially for lunch if you happen to be antique-shopping on Porto-bello Road, is Clarke's at 124 Kensington Church Street, W8. Sally Clarke, the owner and chef, cooked at Michael's in Santa Monica before coming here. (Monday through Friday 12:30 to 2:15 and 7:30 to 10:30, Saturday for dinner only. Lunch $9.25 or $11.75, including tax and service; dinner $16.75 inclusive.)

If you're shopping on the King's Road in Chelsea, Foxtrot Oscar (79 Royal Hospital Road, SW3), is a jolly, reasonably priced place for lunch (352-7179). Lunch or dinner with a bottle of wine would be $20 to $25 for two people. Hilaire (68 Old Brompton Road. SW7) has a lovely huncheon menu for $11.75 if you're in South Kensington (584-8993).

For accommodations, the Connaught, the Berkeley, the Savoy and Claridges are still delightful and still expensive, starting at $144 for a double room. If you know them, you might want to try an elegant Maylair hotel whose address is its name, 47 Park Street (491-7282). It has suites, all with modern kitchens even though room service is from La Gavroche, and the porters will do your grocery shopping. With a minimum stay of three nights, rates start at $185 for one bedroom, $310 for two.

The Stafford Hotel, in a quiet cul-de-sac between St. James's Street and Green Park, is convenient to shops and the theater. Rooms begin at $144 double (493-0111). In the same price range is the Hyde Park Hotel in Knightsbridge, close to some of the best shopping. Double rooms are $150, or $175 if you face Hyde Park (235-2000).

Less expensive hotels that come well-recommended are the Ebury Court (26 Ebury Street, SW1; 730-8147; from $52.50 double), an unpretentious and charming hotel where on may get a four-poster bed, and Number 16 Summer Place (16 Summer Place, SW7; 589-5232) from $65 double), which will bring breakfast to your room, provides a refrigerator, but has no restaurant. An elevator is being installed. Staying there is like being a guest in an elegant home.

because of the reopening last February of the gorgeons Semper opera house and East Germany's attempt to attract stellar performers. The Prague Spring Festival is worth attending, too, in part for unusual Czechoslovak opera repertory - in particular the works of inetana, Dvorak and Janacek - and in part for the sheer beauty of the city.

One other category of festival might be singled out, in which an unusual setting provides a lure of its own. Chief among such festivals are the opera performances in the Roman arena in Verona, Italy, and in the Roman theater in Orange, France, as well as on the floating stage in Lake Constance at the Bregenz Festival in Austria, in the courtyard of the former archbishop's palace in Aix-en-Provence, France, and the bucolic arcadia of Glyndebourne, south of London: Picnicking in formal attire on the manicured awn of a country estate across a fence from contented cows is all very English and really quite wonderful. The music isn't bad, either.

All the festivals mentioned thus far are proven winners; longstanding events at which distinguished musical offerings are almost guaranteed. But there are many other festivals, and what follows is a more idiosyncratic selection based on what seems interesting to me.

The most obvious trend this year is the attention paid to the tercentenaries of Bach, Handel and Domenico Scarlatti and the quatercentenary of Heinrich Schütz; the centenary of Alban Berg, conversely, is being slighted, which goes to show that the music business honors its own only if they have proved themselves at the box office.

Some festivals are designed by their very concentration on the Baroque to do honor to Baroque composers. The Ansbach Bach Week in West Germany, for instance, offers a fine assortment of early-music specialists. The Netherlands, home of many of those specialists, has an Ancient Music Festival in late August and early September in Utrecht, as well as an Amsterdam Scarlatti Marathon in October, with 55 musicians plowing through all of the composer's 500-plus harpsichord sonatas. And then there is Sweden's idyllic Drottningholm Court Theater, which offers some of Europe's most imaginative early-music performances in a perfectly preserved Baroque theater (the one used in Ingmar Bergman's film of Mozart's "Magic ONNOISSEUR'S delights? Try England's Aldeburgh in June, the festi-val founded by Benjamin Britten and carried on by his friends, among them Murray Perahia, the American pianist; there is a pendant in August in the form of the Rostro-povich Festival, also in the Snape Maltings Concert Hall near Aldeburgh.

Or the Bordeaux Festival this month, which offers a particularly rich collection of French musicians. Or the Festival Hector Berlioz in and near Lyon. Or Austria's Schubertiade Hohenems, a feast of Schubert's music by leading lieder and chamber musicians, including three different accounts of his song cycle "Die Winterreise." Or Gian Carlo Menotti's Spoleto Festival in Italy, or Finland's Savonlinna Festival. For those interested in contemporary music, there are three fine fall festivals: the Festival d'Antomne in Paris, the Warsaw Autumn and the Styrian Autumn in Graz, Austria.

Whatever your musical tastes, there should be something to enjoy. And remember: what makes a festival special is not just the quality of its performances or the charm of its setting. It is the very fact that visitors have extricated themselves from their everyday lives, made a journey from afar and hence have become especially receptive to an artistic experience out of the ordinary. It doesn't always happen just that way. But it happens often enough to make the journeys being a foreigner writing about one of Spain's greatest writers, but "I can tell you one thing, if Franco had lost the war, probably none of us would be here - Hugh Thomas, Gerald Brenan, Herbert South-worth, Gabriel Jackson, Jean-Louis Schonberg Claude Couffon and the many others who wrote about Spain, her revolution and the life afterward. Up until the time of Franco the country had a flourishing and brillant culture, but it was suppressed, Spaniards could no longer write about so many things."

Nobody could be more enthusiastic about his adopted land than Gibson. He said, "Madrid is the most exciting city in Europe today. It is an amazing phenomenon, so much is going on to those who knew Madrid Tyears back it is nothing short of a miracle. For some it may be bloody awful, but for me it is the sanctum sanctorum." Gibson who has lived in Madrid since 1978 with his English wife, Carol, and their two teen-aged children, says that Madrid is like Dublin, it has a living center, not like London where things are spread out.

After graduating from Trinity College, Dublin with honors, he taught first at Queens College in Belfast and then at London University and finally gave up teaching in 1975 to devote himself to writing. His other works include "En Busca de José Ansonio" (In Search of José Antonio), "La Joche que Mataron a Calvo Sotelo" (The Night They Killed Calvo Sotelo), "Paracuellos: Como Fue" (Paracuellos: How It Was), "Un Irlandes en España" (An Irishman In Spain) and "The English Vice," this last being a crudy of heaville in British public being a study of brutality in British public schools. He is also working on a four-part documentary with the film director Juan Antonio Barden on the life of Lorca. I think it is going to be very exciting - they are casting now, it must be a person with enormous charisma. I personally would like to see Jack Nicholson, but I don't suppose he would be interested." Gibson considers the finest poems are those in "The Poet in New York" and he especially likes "Poemas del Lago Edem Mills" (Poems from Edem Mills Lake), a lake in Maine where the poet visited and was enchanted by the plants that reminded him of Granada. "The poem has a wonderful, lyrical, wistful melancholy.

"As for his plays, I like them all, but I think the best one is "La Casa de Bernarda Alba," which deals with an embittered widow and her four daughters. "His style had nightened up and he had broadened his horizons after the New York experience."

"But," said Gibson, laughing ruefully, "there is little about the man I don't like. Modern man has lost the sense of being part of nature. Lorce helps him to return to this. He has a mystical, childlike quality that will always appeal to me, his fantastic use of metaphors. Lorca puts one in touch with the deeper levels of the mind, he takes one ! ack to their roots."

In his first book, Gibson quoted a Granada friend of the poet, Gerardo Rosales who said of Losca, "Como un niño de mil quinientos anos" (Like a child of 1,500 years).

Ancient 'Lost-Wax' Method 3 Is Hot Topic in Casting

By JOHN HOLUSHA

TECHNOLOGY

ETROIT — The origins of the "lost-wax" process of casting metal are buried in antiquity. Archeological evidence suggests it was in use as early as 2000 R.C. in the Middle East and some of the finely detailed gold and copper figurines that survive from the period are prized

A variation on this ancient theme, "lost foam," is a hot topic in foundry circles these days. Major manufacturers such as General Motors Corp., John Deere & Co., the U.S. power and farm machinery maker, and Ford Motor Co. are applying it to produce the castings that are the basic building blocks of their cars, trucks sand tractors. GM has said the Conventional casting pracvices are based on sand, which can withstand the 2,600 de-

agree Fahrenheit (1,339-degrees Celsius) temperature of molten siron. Boxes of sand, mixed with chemicals that hind the grans gogether, are pressed over patterns and then baked to form upper and lower molds for the piece to be cast. If the piece is not solid, and cores must also be made and put in the mold to form hollow aspaces for such things as the religider in an angular blank. spaces for such things as the cylinders in an engine block.

With the cores in place, the upper and lower molds are clamped together and the moltan metal is poured in. It is a hot, dirty process, with energy places. V a hot, dirty process, with sparks flying in all directions.
When the molten metal has cooled and hardened, the mold is opened and the casting is shaken to remove core sand from the interior. Then grinders take off the excess metal left where the two halves of the mold met, and cleaning operations take off sand

"stuck to the metal by the binding agents."

The "lost-wax" process produces very precise castings, but it sconsumes a pattern for each piece, made, which is why it is used mostly for jewelry and art objects today, and is not practical for such high-volume applications as cylinder heads or exhaust manifolds. A wax model the exact size of the desired piece is made and put inside a box that is then filled with a molding material. After the material solidifies, it is heated, melting the wax, which drains out of holes put in for that purpose. The copen after it sets.

"Lost foam," which goes by other names, including "evapora--tive-casting process," uses patterns made out of expandable polystyrene, better known as Styrofoam - the stuff of disposable coffee cups. Dense beads of the material are poured into molds and heated so they expand to produce a lightweight, but dimensionally accurate, replica of the desired metal object. The foam model is given a thin outer coating and suspended in a box. Dry sand is poured in and then the whole box is vibrated to force the sand to flow into internal passages.

When molten metal is poured in, the low-density form quickly burns off, thus giving the procedure its name. But the coating, known as a "core wash," holds the sand in place until the metal hardens. The big advantages of the process, foundry engineers say, are that it allows more complex shapes to be cast and eliminates cores and core removal, along with grinding and most cleaning. It also allows designers to lighten casting by using It thinner walls, since the foam can hold sand to tolerances impossi ble with cores.

Ford, which is using "lost foam" to cast imake manifolds for its new Tanrus/Sable models, estimates that the process has cut costs by 30 percent at the foundiry and produces additional savings in later operations. The reason is that the casting, which is closer to the final object, reduces the amount of machining required. Producing castings that require less finishing has long. (Continued on Page 15, Col. 3)

China Is Planning Eurobond

Questions Linger On Pre '49 Issues

By Allan Saunderson

FRANKFURT — The Bank of China will proceed this month with its first bond issue on a European market since 1949, despite opposi-tion from holders of prerevolutionary bonds repudiated by the Communist government, bond market sources said Thursday. They said there was considerable interest in the new issue, which is expected to be a straight Eurobond of about 200 million Dentsche marks ($62.8 million). The Frankfurt-based Dentsche

Bank will be lead manager, the sources said.

Dentsche Bank has not confirmed that it will underwrite the issue, but spokesmen for holders of the old bonds have already written it to outline their claims. "Our view is that they [the Chinesel should not be issuing bonds at all while they're in default," said Michael Gough, director of the Council of Foreign Bond Holders, which is based in London. Mr. Gough said the council could not take legal action to prevent China from issuing debt in marks, but he hoped to persuade the Deutsche Bank to mention in the prospectus that bonds issued before the 1949 revolution have yet

The Beijing government has said it has no responsibility for debt incorred before 1949.

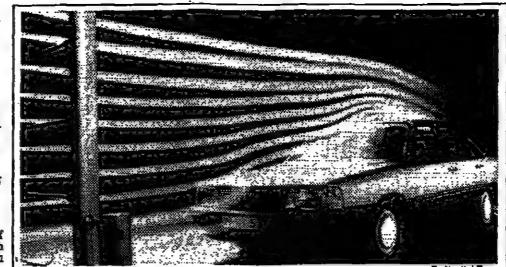

But in Hannover, Wilhelm Kuhlmann, who has written a book about the bonds, said there is growing speculation that the Chinese ernment will modify its position in order to gain freer access to international capital markets.

Bond market sources say borrowings in dollars or sterling are virtually ruled out while claims against the Communist government are outstanding.

In 1983, the British government asked China for indemnity for loans incurred before the 1949 revolution, Mr. Gough said.

Although the pre-1949 bonds were bearer issues and there is no record of who owns them, only about $14 million worth are thought to be outstanding to Ger-to the China issue, having no regulations that govern borrowing by

Icahn Discloses 20% TWA Stake; May Seek Merger

NEW YORK - The financier Carl C. Icahn disclosed Thursday that he has bought a 20.5 percent stake in Trans World Airlines Inc. and is evaluating whether to seek control of the airline. In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Mr. Icahn and a group of companies he con-trols said they were evaluating their alternatives, including seeking control of the carrier.

The group also said it "may explore the possibility of ACF Industries Inc. making a proposal for a merger or business combination" with TWA, Mr. Icahn is chairman of ACF Industries, a transporta-

Mr. Icahn said his group had paid $95.2 million for 6,745,100 shares of TWA, and that 5,156,300 shares were purchased in the open market since March 21. He said said he believes TWA stock is "undervalued, particularly if the presently unsettled labor situation is satisfactorily resolved."

The group's representatives also have had talks with TWA management, but TWA executives reportedly gave them no encouragement to make a merger proposal.

Study Cites U.S. Banks' Ability to Withstand Jolts

By Carl Gewirtz

ional Revald Tribune PARIS -A new study profiling by nationality what banks do in the international market shows that U.S. banks — the largest single supplier and taker of cash - are among the least valuerable to disturbances in the interbank market.

The interbank market, where an estimated $1.5 trillion was lent and borrowed last year by banks for relatively short periods, is the central pillar of the international banking market and accounted for some 66 percent of total business. smooth functioning risk causing of assets (loans) and only 22 permajor funding problems for banks. cent of liabilities (deposits).

U.S. banks have always been considered less vulnerable than others to an interbank crisis be-Bundesbank was unlikely to object transacted in dollars. That means U.S. banks can always turn to the Federal Reserve for dollars in case of a cash crisis, whereas other cen-with each but not dollars. However, a study published Thursday by the Bank for Interna-tional Settlements shows a more fundamental reason why U.S. banks are less vulnerable to interbank shocks: They rely less on outside bank financing than any other national grouping except the Swiss. Overall, 43 percent of the total international banking market is made up of transactions between non-affiliated banks, and 23 percent with related offices. For the U.S. banks, the relationship is reversed: Transactions with non-re-Johns to the interbank market's, lated banks account for 32 percent ture of U.S. banks' business, observes the BIS, in part reflects the large international network which the U.S. banks have developed. Only the Swiss, among the 13 nationalities for which data is provided, rely less on deposits from non-affiliated banks (16 percent of their funding.)

There are, of course, other ways to measure vulnerability. One would be to look at the amount of non-bank deposits since customer funds are considered less volatile than interbank money.

By this measure, Luxembourg banks rank high, drawing 69 percent of their funds from customers compared to only 38 percent for

Brazil Seeks Debt Terms That Will Allow Growth

By Alan Riding

New York Times Service -RIO DE JANEIRO — Brazil's new civilian government has called for repayment terms from its creditors that will permit the country to resume its economic growth.

But the government, which took office March 15, also proposed sharp cutbacks in spending and subsidies aimed at reducing a $17billion budget deficit and curbing inflation, which reached 230 percent last year.

In an address to Congress on Wednesday, Finance Minister Francisco Donnelles said: There can be no healthy and sustained growth with high inflation. The inflationary spiral is principally caused through financing the government deficit with new money."

Mr. Domelles's first major policy statement came hours before he flew to Washington to seek the International Monetary Fund's approval of the new government's economic targets for the year.

The main emphasis in his ad-

While acknowledging that the strong dollar had boosted BASF sales in the United States, as well as in foreign markets where the company competes against U.S. and Japanese chemical giants, Mr. Albers stressed that cost-cutting measures at home and the introduction of new specialty products, particularly in plastics, had helped the company's profits.

The company remains troubled by losses in oil refining but has managed to cut these considerably Mr. Albers said. BASF cut its deficit in refining operations last year to 120 million DM from 200 million DM, narrowing the loss further this quarter.

Goldsmith Fails in Board Bid

SAN FRANCISCO - Sir James Goldsmith, the British entrepreneur, failed Thorsday to win any seats on the board of Crown Zellerbach Corp. at its annual meeting.

The company's chairman, William Creson, said a preliminary count of proxies showed the management nominated directors were overwhelmingly elected. He said the official count may not be known for weeks. Sir James is Crown Zellerbach's largest shareholder and announced on Wednesday that he had doubled his stake in the company, to 19.6 percent of the common shares out-

Earlier, Sir James failed in an attempt through a federal court in New York to delay Thursday's meeting of shareholders. He did not attend the meeting.

But a representative for the financier placed Sir James and two other names in nomination. The challengers also proposed a resolution which aimed at ending a complicated "poison-pill" provision designed to prevent any unsolicited takeover.

There was no immediate indication on the vote on that resolution.

Chrysler Plans Expansion United Press International

DETROIT - Chrysler Corp. announced Thursday it will invest. $150 million in new facilities to increase four-cylinder engine capacity at its plant in suburban Trenton, Michigan from 800,000 to more than one million a year.

its 6,100 white-collar workers will be laid off, but sources say many layoffs are part of a plan to cut internal budgets by 25 percent.

A company spokesman, Jerry Sloan, would not comment on the severity of the cuts but said some workers conceivably could take early retirement if laid off. Departments that can save money by eliminating projects - and use layoffs as a last resort - are being allowed to do so, he said.

In March, the company threatened to close the Kenosha plant, the oldest car-assembly plant in the United States, and over the weekend it outlined its demands in a letter to the United Auto Workers.

Those demands included 40cent-an-hour pay cuts, climination of nine days off annually and major revisions in job classifications. The company also gave the union until May 24 to "make a commitment" to its plan, Mr. Sloan said.

result of the March walkout by the Pan Am said the airline had a Transport Workers Union, which pretax loss of $141.6 million in the first quarter compared with a loss of $74.8 million a year earlier, while revenue fell 25.8 percent, to $584.8 million from $787.9 million.

It said aidine operating capacity in the first quarter was down 25.2 percent from a year earlier and that as schedules were gradually re-stored in April, the airline operated at 67.5 percent of capacity.

With a schedule change on April 28, Pan Am said its operations rose to more than 100 percent of last year's capacity levels and that it will expand further in June.

Pan Am said the drop in revenue in the first three months of the year was only partly offset by a 15.1percent decline in expenses, to $708.2 million from $833.9 million.

It said many expenses, including rentals of aircraft and airport facilities, interest payments on debt, depreciation of assets and most employee benefit costs, were not reduced by the strike,

During the first quarter, the airline had capital gains of $16.1 milcompared with capital gains of $3.6 million a year earlier.

The company last month agreed to sell its huge Pacific division to United Airlines for $750 million as part of its continuing efforts to stem losses and improve its balance sheet.

Total's Profit, Aided by Dollar, Up 120% in '84

PARIS - Cie. Française des Pétroles, which markets under the Total name, said Thursday that earnings rose sharply last year due to the impact of the dollar's surge in value.

It said net attributable consolidated profits rose 120 percent, to 1.71 billion French francs ($180 million) in 1984, from 774 million francs the previous year.

Operating profits before depreciation and provisions rose 7 percent, to 8.72 billion francs from 8.14 billion francs.

The figures were boosted by a 1.4-billion-franc gain on the replacement value of Total oil stocks due to the surge in the dollar's value against the franc last year, the company said.

Excluding this element, profit before depreciation and pro-visions fell 7 percent, to 7.32 billion francs from 7.84 billion francs, it said.

Operating profits were derived almost entirely from oil production, notably in the North Sea, Total said, Refinery and distribution activities continued to make losses because of depressed market conditions.

RAND MINES - A LEADER IN COAL AND GOLD

Mr. A. A. Sealey, Deputy Chairman of Rand Mines and Chairman of the Coal and Base Minerals Divisions, talks to David Carte, Editor of the "Sunday Times Business Times."

Mr. A. A. Sealey, Deputy Chairman of Rand Mines and Chairman of the Coal and Base Minerals Divisions.

uch of the gold behind the recent success of Barlow Rand's venerable old mining house, Rand Mines, has been black-yes, coal.

Rand Mines' gold mines produce 70 tons of gold a year but no South African mining house is less dependent on the yellow metal than Rand Mines. Coal accounts for 44% of the group's taxed income, compared to gold's contribution of 33%. Chrome, fluorspar, forestry, management fees and property provide the balance. Total revenue from gold at roughly $750-million exceeds total income from coal, at $400-million. But costs are higher in gold mining and the company's four gold mines-Harmony, Blyvooruitzicht, Durban Roodepoort Deep and East Rand Proprietary Mines-are all less than 30% owned.

Consequently, only dividends from gold are brought to account. The coal mines are mostly consolidated. Coal is therefore more important at the bottom line.

While its four gold mines and mining holding company, Transvaal Consolidated Lands (TC Lands), are listed on several world stock exchanges, Rand Mines itself has not been quoted since Barlow Rand took it over in 1971.

Rand Mines has been an innovator in mining since it was founded by gold pioneers Herman Eckstein, Alfred Beit and Julius Wehrner in 1887.

the cyanide gold extraction process, was a leader in rock mechanics and pioneered extensive and deep level underground mining at Crown Mines - until recently the biggest and deepest mine in the

It was one of the first mining houses to investigate the Free State gold fields and it was a Rand Mines chemist who discovered uranium in Witwatersrand gold

But for indecision and neglect over decades by its former London parent, Rand Mines may today have been one of the two biggest mining houses in South Africa with several times its present asset

Rand Mines' most recent pioneering step was to concentrate more on coal than gold, shortly before successive oil crises in the seventies pushed up international coal prices.

"When Barlow Rand took control of Rand Mines in 1971, most of Rand Mines' gold mines were old or nearly worked out," explains coal division chairman, Allen Sealey, "But its subsidiary, Transvaal Consolidated Lands (TC Lands), had enormous unexploited coal

The late Punch Barlow, who was chairman of Barlow Rand at the time, supported the Rand Mines' management view that its future lay in coal. Coal markets within South Africa were limited, so Rand Mines looked abroad. Having done pioneering work extracting low ash coal from bituminous coal by gravity separation, we were able to participate in South Africa's first 11-year contract to supply Japan."

The rest is history. South African coal exports that year were about a million tons. Now they are around 40-million tons and by 1989 they will be 80-million tons. South African coal producers have won increasing market share in world markets through an outstanding record of reliability.

They have had an edge on their rivals in labour dependability and in technology. South African coal mines and handling facilities are among the most modern in the world. Rand Mines, a founder member of the Richards Bay coal terminal, has been in the forefront of this drive and accounts for 30% of exports. Its biggest customers are in Germany, France and Japan.

It played a key role in the development of Rand Mines has also been a beneficiary of soaring coal demand within South Africa because of huge expansion by Escom, the country's major electricity utility, which now burns 55-million tons of coal a year.

Rand Mines' Duvha colliery supplies Escom's Duvha Power Station exclusively. It has been contracted to supply two more 3,600 MW power stations -Kendall (Khurala mine) and Majuba. Each entails development of a new mine. Rand Mines started its first open cast operation on the Welgedacht mine in northern Natal in 1976. This was followed by three-other huse coal mines in the Transvaal - Rietspruit, Duvha and Middelburg. These developments required capital investments of $500million. Shell is a 50% partner in the Rietspruit export colliery and BP is the major partner in the mine at Middelburg. Today, the mines Rand Mines manages produce nearly 28-million tons of coal a year, 14-million tons of which are exported. Most of the coal comes from open cast pits, employing some of the biggest walking draglines in the world. Unexploited coal reserves are massive at approximately 14.5-billion in situ tons.

While it has concentrated on coal, recently Rand Mines has not neglected gold. It is spending $150-million rejuvenating ERPM and Harmony and is exploring a promising gold prospect south of Johannesburg. It has also stepped up gold extraction from old mine

The company has some of the biggest chromium reserves in the world. It exports large quantities of ore but large volumes are upgraded to ferrochrome for further conversion to stainless steel at Barlow Rand's Middelburg Steel and

The Barlow Rand group takes its social responsibilities extremely seriously.

Says Mr. Sealey, "We go to enormous lengths to improve the quality of life for all staff. In every area possible, we are an equal opportunity employer. We are working to eliminate areas where there is statutory discrimination."

Today Rand Mines employs 92,000 persons and has about half a million dependents. The wage bill is $300-million a year. The company pays $300,000 every

RANDALL JARRELL'S LETTERS: An Autobiographical and Literary Selection

Edited by Mary Jarrell. $29.95. Houghton Mifflin, 2 Park Street, Boston, Mass. 02108.

Reviewed by Monroe Spears

HESE are wonderful letters, fully as good I as I hoped they would be. Witty, often brilliantly perceptive, often touching, usually funny, they have many of the best qualities of Randall Jarrell's criticism and his comic novel, Pictures From an Institution."

Precocious and prodigious though he was, Jarrell retained both a child's curiosity and a Jarrell retained both a child's curiosity and a child's cruelty. (Or a cat's, for there was something feline in the way this great cat-lover toyed with his prey.) At the same time, this most formidable of critics professed an abhorence of criticism and suspicion of the intellect, and as a poet his great subjects were pity and nostalgia for childhood.

I have the impression that farrell is read and I have the impression that Jarrell is read and mjoyed more now than the other New Critics. this a fitting irony that he, who spent much of his time attacking criticism, and especially those kinds now regarded as New Critical, should wind up in this pigeonhole. But it is a sad irony that Jarrell, who yearned to be remembered as poet rather than as critic, should be suffering the fate he feared: Poet of talent, critic of genius, seems to be the verdict of even his greatest admirers. Some of the reasons for this preference are obvious: Jarrell as critic, as these letters show once more, is more readable, more entertaining than his peers. He is less concerned than they with attempting to formulate principles of general validity: His specialty is undermining the whole critical enterprise. He flatters his readers by making them the final judge, urging them to read for pleasure

This allows Jarrell to express both sides of his nature: exalting the natural, the simple, the spontaneous (also the naive, the childish, cometimes the sentimental), in a kind of romantic primitivism; and expressing aggressions by attacking with savage glee both his rivals and the critics from whom he springs. There is an Oedipal tinge to this: He loves the maternal, emotional, poetic side of himself and others and directs his hostility toward the masculine, paternal, intellectual side; symbolically, he strikes the father dead. Auden was the earliest and most conspicuous of these father-figures: Jarrell's first publication was a review in 1934 of Auden's poetry; he wanted to write his master's thesis and eventually a book on Auden, and Auden's influence on him both as poet and as thinked was enormous. Yet the two long essays about Auden that he did publish were, though brilliant, essentially demolition work, destroying the foundations of Auden's reputation. Something of the same pattern may be seen in the relation to Allen Tate, who helped get Jarrell published and was repaid by remoteness tinged with hostility. John Crowe Ransom and R. P. Blackmar. too, were kind and helpful to Jarrell. With Tate, they were leading figures of the Age of Criticism that Jarrell made his reputation by attacking. The hand that fed Jarrell was likely to get bitten.

These letters, edited and annotated lovingly by Jarrell's widow, are described as an "autobiographical and literary selection." She chose some 400 of about 2,500 letters available to her, ranging from Jarrell's senior year at Van-derbilt in 1935 to his death in 1965. The letters to his first wife during his service in the Air Corps (1942-46) are especially interesting. Jar-rell established his reputation as the leading poet of the air war in "Little Friend, Little Friend" (1945) and "Losses" (1948). Jarrell served as a ground instructor; he washed out as a pilot, was never sent overseas, and was never a pilot, was never sent overseas, and was never in combat. But, telling stories told to him by participants in battle, he shows the imaginative empathy worthy of his reputation.

There are sidelights on in literary history, including backstage views of Blackmur and John Berryman at Princeton, Leslie Fiedle and Robert Fitzgerald at the Indiana School of Letters, the Salzburg Seminar, the Poetry Congress and Inculty controversies and fends at Greenshore. faculty controversies and feuds at Greensboro. There are letters to people ranging from Han-nah Arendt (to whom he confesses, "Indeed I don't read Greek — it's a wonder I can read English. In my earlier lives I couldn't read anything, but just sang songs so that people put gold bracelets on my arms or threw big bones at me") to Edmund Wilson, Elizabeth Bishop and Marianne Moore. The letters are not an intellectual autobiography, as too many topics are untouched, but there are some brilliant pages. Robert Lowell called Jarrell a "radical liberal"; for some peri-ods, in some sense, he was a Marxist, unlike his Southern peers.

The most revealing letters are those to the women he loved: the wartime letters to his first wife, Mackie; the series to Elisabeth Eisler, the Viennese woman with whom he fell in love at Salzburg in 1948; and the letters to Mary, from

Besides the problem of playing against the Celtics in Boston Garden, where they have won 17 of their last 18 playoff games, De-troit's Islah Thomas had to do it without his uniform, stolen during the day. The shirt Thomas wore had a 42 but lacked a name. That was fitting, because the performance of the player wearing it wasn't especially noteworthy.

"When they unpacked the uniforms tonight mine wasn't there," Thomas said. "It threw me off a little bit. I don't think my head was in the game during part of the first quarter. It just didn't feel right." This was the 15th time in 15

Ryan Misses No-Hitter, Expos Prevail

MONTREAL - Nolan Ryan of the Houston Astros was on the track of another no-hitter Wednesday night at Montreal against the Expos but lost his bid for his sixth career no-hitter in the sixth inning. He had lost the game even earlier. Although he struck out 10 batters in seven innings, Ryan and the Astros were beaten, 1-0, by Expos' rookie Joe Hesketh.

Wildness, a longtime Ryan bugaboo that had largely disappeared in recent years, beat him again. In the second inning Ryan walked Dan Driessen, hit Hubic Brooks with a pitch and walked Tim Wallach to load the bases. He then walked rookie Herm Winningham to force in a run with nobody out. Also in a typical Ryan performance, he then struck out the next three batters. Ryan lost his no-hitter when Driessen singled in the sixth inning. Hubie Brooks followed with a single, but Ryan worked out of the jam.

Ryan was not happy with his performance, even if it was the 157th game in which he struck out 10 or more, running his career strikeout total to 3,922.

That's no way to lose a game," he said. "I was too wild. We lose only 1-0 and I walk in the only run. Don't blame it on the cold, either." Hesketh struck out 12 batters. He gave way to Jeff Reardon after giving up his fourth hit, a two-out double by Bill Doran in the eighth.

Cruise Line Returns to the Days of Sail

By Joseph Novitski

PARIS — A tall sailing ship, the first in three-quarters of a century to be built from the keel up for strictly commercial purposes, is being constructed for an American cruise line in a French shipyard. The Windstar, whose four masts will each tower 188 feet (57 meters) above the water, is neither an anachronism nor an experiment. The cut of her modern rig, the largest of its kind ever undertaken, would be recognized on sight by most cruising sailors, but it is being designed and developed by computers. Computers will also control the external stabilizers and internal ballasting as well as the interaction between sail and auxiliary engine power. But the ship was designed from the start, in Finland and in France, to move best and fastest under sail. The staysail schooner sailplan, with sails that will roll up like window blinds on remote command to huge hydraulic winches, has half the total area of the last and largest square riggers. But it has such efficiency and ease of operation that a turn-of-the-century sailor, bound around Cape Horn, might have cried

All those involved in the project, from the American board chairman to the French project engineers, point out that, for them, practicality rules, not nostalgia. The $33-million ship was commissioned to make money carrying cruise passengers, not to test theories of energy conservation.

"Fuel economy was not the primary consideration," said Karl G. Andren, the Finnish-born son of a sea captain. He formed Miami-based Windstar Sail Cruises Ltd. as the ship's owner and operator and is the company's board chairman. Andren, 38, moved from a career on Wall Street into shipping 10 years ago and is now president of the Circle Line, which carries passengers on tours of New York's harbor.

ing decision, based on study, that the cruise market was ripe for specialization, for a new kind of cruise." he said. Still, all the leaders of the project seem to have a sense that they are making history by bringing new technology to bear on the ancient art of going to sea under sail. Even a delegation of unionized French shippard workers, visiting management on other mat-ters, asked for permission to photograph the recently completed scale model of the new ship type.

The construction plans for the Windstar show two decks of outside cabins only, public rooms with roofs that roll away at night to give a view of the sails and stars, and outboard-powered launches to take passengers diving water-skiing or touring. Other touches will include intricate cabinetry and individual video players in the cabins. The Windstar and an identical ship, Windsong, were ordered in November by Windstar Sail Cruises at a cost of S66 million. They are to carry 150 passengers, in a fuxury setting designed by a Parisian architect, Marc Held, on two-week cruises in the Caribbean and, eventually, the Mediterranean,

The first keel was laid March 27 in Le Havre. The Windstar's maiden voyage, after extensive fitting and testing, is scheduled for early December 1986. Bookings will be taken late this year. The Windstar will be long, lean and lofty, and, at 440 feet overall and 361 feet on the waterline, larger than the largest squarerigged training vessel now sailing. Its hull more closely resembles the last commercial square-riggers than a modern passenger ship. but its four masts will be taller than the tallest mast on the famous Cutty Sark clipper. "There is no doubt that she is to be a sailing ship," says François Faury, 44, the engineer in charge of the yard in Le Havre where 80

"The primary consideration was a market- welders are cutting and fitting plates and ribs in rusty-rose-colored steel, while engineers and computer-programmers design and test the hull and sail propulsion system.

The sailing system, assisted by three dieselectric engines, is descended from the big Yankee schooners that traded between New England and the Caribbean in the dying days of sail between the two world wars. The French builders are also drawing on research that began when the Arab oil embargo of 1973 first started naval architects, shipowners and governments thinking about a return to sail power for shipping.

The Japanese shippard Nippon Kokan
K.K. has launched five coastal tankers and two bulk carriers with airfoil sails to assist their main engines when conditions are right. Still, 10 years have passed since a University of Michigan technical study commissioned by the U.S. Maritime Administration predicted that modern sailing vessels with auxiliary power might cover Pacific trading routes more cheaply than motor vessels if the price of bunker fuel rose above $15 a barrel. The price has now reached $40 a barrel, but no test of a modern sailing rig on this scale has yet been undertaken.

The Windstar marks such a departure from current designs that it will undoubtedly serve as a practical test for others interested in the energy savings of sail. As Faury said at an engineering symposium two years ago, of an experimental Japanese ship: "She has made it possible to discover and solve practical problems and to make shipowners and builders aware of the idea, which is certainly not new, that the wind is an inexhaustible source of energy that is quite easily converted."

Joseph Navitski, a former correspondent for The New York Times and The Washington Post, is writing a book about the Windstar.
